MILLION DOLLAR ROAD BOND PROPOSAL APPROVED BY GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION

PLAN MERITS SUPPORT OF ALL OUR CITIZENS

ELECTION OF OFFICERS RESULTS IN SE-LECTION OF HON. PETER GEARHART

A MOST ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING

The annual meeting of the Clear-
field County Good Roads Association
held in the court house yesterday was attended by nearly two hundred good roads enthusiasts from every section of the county.

The meeting was called to order
in the Arbitration Room at 1:45
o'clock, but the crowd was so large it
was found necessary to adjourn to
the court room.

President Letzinger presided and his annual report detailing the past
year's accomplishments demonstrated that the Association was on the job all the time and is entitled to a great deal of credit for the splendid
road program being worked out by the State Highway department and
county commissioners in the county.

Following the remarks of the President on motion the chair appointed
a nominating committee of five members to prepare and present a list of the officers to be nominated and elected for the coming year. The committee follows: J. D. Connelly, Clearfield; Charles G. Gill, Lawrence; W. B.
Stephenson, Mahaffey; Walter Hat-
ton, DuBois, and Dr. H. H. Lewis, of Surveyor. The committee reported
the following nominations:

President—Peter Gearhart, of Clearfield R. D.

Vice Presidents—A. E. Letzinger,
Clearfield; James W. Ruffner, Ma-
dona; W. B. Stephenson, Mahaffey;
E. C. Faust, LeCombe's Mills; J. R.
Osburn, DuBois.

Secretary—John M. Bain, of Clear-
field.

Treasurer—H. B. Whiteman, Jr., of Clearfield.

Thomas R. McDowell, field representative of the State Highway Department, was then introduced and
talked at some length on the policy
and program of the Highway department. The speaker told what was being done for Clearfield county
roads by the state but said the county
must not expect the state to do it all.

He then mentioned the counties in the state which had already voted for
county bond issues for road building
purposes and urged Clearfield county
to do likewise.

Mr. McDowell's remarks made a profound impression upon his hearers and he was heartily applauded
at the close.

Hon. Joseph E. Phillips of Clearfield, then offered the following resolution:

Whereas, at the meeting of the Clearfield County Good Roads Association held a year ago a resolution was passed and presented to the county commissioners asking them to present to the people of the county
the question of a million dollar bond
issue for road purposes at the coming election; and

Whereas, similar resolutions were passed and presented by other local road associations and organizations
interested in roads; and

Whereas the matter was not reached at the elections of the year now
passed;

And whereas, a new board of county commissioners has been elected to office, and at the advice of their
attorney, desire a further expression
of the wishes of the people of the county on the question of presenting
this matter to the voters at the coming election.

Now, Therefore, be it Resolved,
that wa, the Clearfield County Good Roads Association, in convention assembled, request of the present board

of county commissioners that they proceed to present to the people of Clearfield county by proper and legal steps the question of the issuance of
a million dollar bond issue for road
purposes to be voted upon at the spring election, May 18, 1920.

After considerable discussion the resolution was adopted by a unanimous rising vote, although several
of the Mahaffey and Bell township
representatives refrained from voting. The delegation from this section was more or less disgruntled
over their road situation. Last year
the State Highway department and
county commissioners at the request
of the Good Roads Association agreed
to construct two miles of road between Mahaffey and McGee's Mills
on the fifty-fifty plan, in order to eliminate the most dangerous road
proposition in the county. Since that time the road in question has been taken over by the state as a deferred
primary road and as that means nothing doing for five years at least the upriver fellows are peeved and justly
so. In order, that the difficulty may
be solved and the condition remedied
Dr. J. Frank Rowles of Mahaffey,
offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The efforts of local interests to eliminate the dangerous crossing on the part of Route No. 62 between McGee's Mills and Mahaffey
borough have so far been unsuccessful.

And Whereas, This same section of highway receives all the travel of two
main highway systems passing thru
the gap at the junction of Chest creek
with the Susquehanna river,

Therefore, be it Resolved, that this
association hereby approves the action of the county commissioners in placing this piece of highway under construction on a 50-50 basis with
the State Highway department.

On motion of Hon. Joseph E. Phillips the resolution was unanimously
adopted without debate.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was taken up and the
nominations as presented by the committee on nominations were then unanimously chosen to the different offices.

President Gearhart was called to
the chair, and after a brief address,
in which he pointed out the necessity
for united and aggressive action for
the coming year, announced the appointment of the following executive
committee:

District No. 1—Clearfield borough,
Lawrence and Goshen townships—
John C. Forsyth, Clearfield, Chairman.

No. 2—Girard, Covington and Kar-

ships—C. B. Maxwell.

and Bradford townships—A. C. Lan-
sberry, Bigler.

boroughs, Decatur township—R. H.
Thompson, Osceola Mills.

No. 6—Houtzdale and Brisbin boroughs, Woodward township—Dr. A.
H. Pigeon, Houtzdale.

No. 8—Irvona, Coalport and Glen
Hope boroughs, Beccaria township—

Washington.

No. 10—Ramey borough, Bigler and Guelich townships—Chas. G. Gill, Ma-
dona.

WAR SHARPENED THE MENTAL FACULTIES OF STATE STUDENTS

STATE COLLEGE PA., March 3.—
With the return to college last fall
of hundreds of Penn State students
who had dropped their studies to enter the service, faculty members looked for a general slump in studies. In all departments, as a reaction from
the excitement of war. However, the results of the first half-year's work,
completed recently, show the opposite
effect, and only about one per cent.
of the students have found it necessary to drop their studies. This is a much smaller number of failures
than was recorded in the average
year before the war, and the instructors are led to believe that there is a tendency on the part of most students
to "settle down" and get the most out
of their college work.

General conditions about the college show that since the war students
are much more inclined to participate
in all kinds of campus activities. The college is fairly alive with groups doing anything from playing basketball
league games to producing a variety
of amateur theatricals. The graduation of a large "way class" several weeks ago reduced the college enrollment by more than one hundred, but
former students returning to complete courses have brought the total
figure to within a score of 3,000.

STOCK OPENINGS

NEW YORK, March 3.—Prices
were irregular at the opening of the stock market today, but variations
from yesterday's close were fraction-
al. The only stock which changed
more than a point was Baldwin,
which opened at 110, gaining 1-8.
Central Leather opened at 77 1-8 off
1-4, Union Pacific at 29 1-4, unchanged,
United States Rubber at 95 1-2
up 5-8.

No. 11—Lumber City borough, Jordan,
Knox and Ferguson townships—
C. S. Strong, Ansonville.

No. 12—Mahaffey borough, Bell
and Greenwood townships—G. W.
Hatch, Mahaffey, R. D.

No. 13—Curwensville borough and Pike township—R. D. Swoope, Cur-wensville.

No. 14—Grampian borough, Penn
and Pike townships—Hon. D. D. Miller, Grampian.

No. 15—Sandy and Huston townships—F. M. Timlin.

No. 16—Troutville borough, Union
and Brady townships—C. H. Good-
lander, DuBois, R. D.

No. 17—Cooper township—R. H.
Sommerville, Winburne.

Following the adjournment of the meeting the Mahaffey and McGee's
delegation had a meeting with the county commissioners and as a result
of that meeting all hands left at 1:15
today for Harrisburg where they will meet Highway Commissioner Sadler
and endeavor to have satisfactory adjustment made of the Mahaffey and McGee's snarl.

GAME COMMISSION STATES POSITION ON PLACING OF POISON FOR VERMIN

For several years past reports have sporadically emanated from various parts of the state alleging that beneficial wild life of various kinds was
being destroyed in a wholesale manner through the efforts of officers in
the employ of the State Game Commission, to destroy vermin with poison as a protection to game and wild birds. While officers of the Game Commission have at no time been permitted to carelessly use strychnine, (the only poison ever used by the Department) and have at all times been instructed to refrain from using such method unless absolutely
necessary, and then only in places
well back from habitation and in such a manner that no harm would come
to beneficial wild life or domestic animals in their proper place, still to be positive these instructions were being closely adhered to and that the
reports made were in error, each report has been carefully investigated
to a conclusion. It is gratifying to state that the outstanding feature of
all these investigations in that the
reports without exception could not
be verified by those making same, and
we have never found a single wild
turkey, or ruffed grouse, or ring-neck
pheasant, or quail, or deer, or bear,
or rabbit, or squirrel, or song or insectivorous birds in any number that had been killed through the work of
our officers, or even though poison
that had been placed presumably by bounty seekers, although numbers of
persons claim to have found the bodies of such creatures, which, as above
stated, they could not substantiate.

Killing of Crows.

In the killing of crows when mas-
saged in large numbers during the win-tertime, after the close of the hunting season, the officers and duly appointed agents of the Game Commission, have had excellent results without any harm to either game or beneficial wild birds. The only vehicle
used for this work is screened whole corn prepared according to the formula directed by the Game Commission
and before placing the corn poisoned
with strychnine, the crows are regularly fed at a given point for a number of days. When thoroughly accustomed to such feeding place a sufficient amount of the treated corn is placed in such a manner that any un-
consumed balance may be easily removed. By following this procedure
beneficial results will be obtained
without injury to game or beneficial
wild birds.

Recent Newspaper Agitation Against Poison.

Recently there has been considerable agitation in the public press of
the state against the improper use of
poison charged to officers of the Game Commission as well as trappers. Investigations made during the past month by the Department, fail to disclose conditions such as reported
and no actual evidence could be obtained indicating that beneficial wild birds or game of any kind had fallen prey to such methods. Several persons who claimed to have had domestic poultry and other livestock destroyed through poison supposed to have been placed by representatives
of the Department and trappers
frankly admitted to the officers investigating same that they had not
lost any livestock as reported, one
man saying he simply wanted to frighten people whom he suspected of
using poison to destroy vermin lest
they do harm and probably kill his dogs which were running at large
throughout the surrounding territory.

Investigations made by the Game Commission from time to time have confirmed reports that in certain sections of the state unscrupulous per-

AN AMERICAN WORKMAN DISCUSSES COMING OF A "REVOLUTION"

To the Editor—
Today, Washington's birthday, or
the day that is being celebrated as Washington's birthday, I had a day
off from work, so I decided to use a part of this time in getting a long-deferred haircut.

I walked into a barber shop on Sixty-first street, a shop that had
the appearance of having needed a
general cleaning for possibly a longer time than I had been needing a haircut.

The barber had about one week's
growth of beard on his dirty face
and he was murdering the English
language, making no excuses for having no fire or hot water, but while
he knew very few words of English and could scarcely pronounce
those in a way that could be understood, it did not take him long to make me understand that he was a
"revolutionist."

Yes, that was what he called himself, and he had had much practice with this big word, for he pronounced it more plainly than other words.

The revolution is coming soon, so he informed me, and then the poor man will have a chance.

I listened as patiently as I could,
and in the meantime another customer came in, and from all appearances a man like myself, an American citizen and American born, yet
he agreed with the barber.

So now the revolution began to revolve and the capitalists were run over and flattened out during each revolution.

The unions and some few other people, according to these two men, are going to rise up in their might
and wipe out everything, as it now exists, from the government down to

SHANTUNG RESERVATION BEFORE SENATE TODAY

LODGE WON ON MONROE DOCTRINE AND

17 DEMOCRATS SUPPORTED LODGE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Senate leaders hoped to make progress on the Lodge reservations to the peace treaty today.
The Shantung reservation is now before the Senate which has adopted the Monroe Doctrine and the domestic questions.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The Senate today adopted two of the Lodge reservations to the peace treaty with Germany in their original form. One of them was the Monroe doctrine reservation and the vote on it demonstrated, in the opinion of many senators, the hopelessness of ratification efforts, and certainty of the treaty going into the presidential campaign. The other reservation adopted was that concerning domestic questions.

Seventeen Democrats voted with the Republicans to bring about adoption of the Lodge reservation on the Monroe doctrine.
The reservation adopted today is wholly obnoxious to President Wilson, as he has stated. Before agreeing to it the Senate rejected a reservation which the President told Senator Ellsworth
he would accept.

The vote was 58 to 22. Of the 58, 17 were Democrats and 41 Republicans. The 22 who opposed the reservation were all Democrats.

PRESIDENT TAKES MOTOR CAR RIDE THROUGH STREETS OF WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, March 3.—For the first time since early last October President Wilson took a motor trip through the streets of Washington riding in a closed car and accompanied by Mrs.
Wilson and Dr. Cary T. Grayson. They motored along the Potomac up Pennsylvania avenue and circled the capital building. Only a few persons saw him. Those who did doffed their hats and there were two or three outbursts of cheering at the

CONTEMPLATED INCREASE IN PRICE OF SHOES SUBJECT TO HOUSE PROBE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—A 25 per cent increase in the prices of shoes is being contemplated according to information received by Senator McNary, of Oregon, he said today. He has introduced a resolution for a drastic investigation of the shoe industry. "There does not seem to be any need for an in-crease
in view of the decline in leather prices and the cutting off the
leather exporting," he said.

PALMER'S METHOD OF HANDLING SUGAR PRICES PUT UNDER FIRE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—An investigation of Attorney General Palmer's handling of the Louisiana sugar situation which is alleged to have resulted in an increase in price from 11c to 17c was authorized today by the House Rules Committee. It will be investigated by the House Judiciary committee. In asking for the investigation Representative Pinkham of Massachusetts
charged that Palmer's action in regard to the Louisiana crop has increased the price of sugar all over the country.

SERIOUS CROSSING ACCIDENT

PITTSBURGH, March 3.—When the automobile in which they were riding was struck at the Whitmer crossing by a B. & O. train Mrs. E. Carter, aged 50, was instantly killed and her husband, the head of the Carter Electric Company, lost both legs.

The MAN NOBODY KNEW at HOLWORTHY HALL.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—In a base hospital at Neuilly, France, his face disfigured beyond recognition, an American soldier serving in the French army attracts attention by his deep despondency. Assisted by the surgeons for a photograph to guide them in making over his face, he offers in derision a picture of the Savior, bidding them take that as a model. They do so, making a remarkable likeness.

CHAPTER II.—Invalided home, on the boat he meets Martin Harmon, New York broker, who is attracted by his remarkable features. The ex-soldier gives his name as "Henry Hilliard," and his home as Syracuse, New York. He left there under a cloud, and is embittered against his former fellow townsmen. Harmon makes him a proposition to sell mining stocks in Syracuse, concealing his identity. He accepts it, seeing in it a chance to make good and prove he has been underestimated.

CHAPTER III.—In Syracuse "Hilliard" (in reality Richard Morgan) is accepted as a stranger. He visits James Cullen, a former employer, relating a story of the death of Richard Morgan, and is surprised to be known by Cullen and his youthful daughter Angela. While at the Cullen home Carol Durant, Morgan's former fiancée, makes a call.

CHAPTER IV.—Hilliard repeats to Carol his story of Morgan's death and is deeply moved by the evidence of her deep love for the supposed dead man. He resolves, however, to continue the deception.

CHAPTER V.—Next day Hilliard gathers from Angela that Carol had always loved Dick Morgan, and while delivering to her a letter supposedly from her former fiancée realizes that his affection is unchanged. His words by Doctor Durant, Carol's father, also shakes his resolution to continue the deception, but he conquers it.

CHAPTER VI.—In Syracuse Hilliard is looked upon as a capitalist and mining expert, and in that capacity, in pursuance of his object, interested in the possibilities of wealth in mining properties. The Cullens and Hilliard go to the Durant home for dinner.

CHAPTER VII.—Observations at the Durants convince Hilliard that the doctor and his daughter had always been his true friends, and his love for Carol becomes stronger. He realizes he has a dangerous rival in Jack Armstrong, also very much in love with Carol, and the two men tacitly agree to fight it out fairly.

CHAPTER VIII.—Despite his success in interesting capitalists of Syracuse in his mining ventures (which he believes to be a sound proposition) Hilliard secretly has placed himself in such a false position, and in justice to Harmon feels he must go on. He makes confession to Carol of his love for her, and she admits the possibility of his affection being returned in time.

"At first, Hilliard was untouched by the shock; the force of it seemed to pass over him entirely; then all at once, as he was caught by the drift of it, his hands began to tremble violently; and his pulses were clanging with sweat. His stomach seemed to drop out of him, and he was nauseated by the tremendous purport of his employer's enunciation.

"Mr. Harmon!" he panted, under his breath, "Mr. Harmon!"

The New Yorker looked at him in genuine surprise.

"What's the matter, Hilliard? You look sick! Or—do—n it, man. If that's another one of your bluffs, you're wasting your time. You haven't worked up such a holy disposition you believe in this mine, have you?" He moved uneasily. "I wish you'd wipe that pious expression off your face—or is it glued on?"

"Hilliard's voice shook uncontrollably.

"This . . . this mine?" he stammered. "You told me—"

"I'll stand by everything I've ever told you, Hilliard. I'll prove it. It's an area of mineralized schist with disseminated copper values. And we've got over a hundred acres of it. And part of the shaft, too!" He laughed noisily. "Of course, altogether there's about five hundred square miles of that same sort of land in the same state, but what's the odds as long as you're happy? Tell me you aren't wise? Rot! Why, you know all about it when we were on the boat!"

Hilliard's muscles were working in hysterical jumps, and his face was distorted.

"Shut up!" The big man was domineering, ugly. "Understand me? You keep your mouth shut if you know what's good for you! Didn't you come up here to get square with your 'friends'? Your friends? His accent was superlatively contemptuous. "You knew it wasn't a producing mine, didn't you?"

"You told me it was a wonderful prospect! I knew it was a long shot, but I thought there was some value there . . . a lot of it . . . and you said the shaft . . . you always said the shaft was—"

Harmon reached for another cigarette; there was undisguised perplexity on his face.

"Son, if you aren't a mighty good actor, you're . . . are you going to claim you didn't know what this mine is? After all that whining and squealing of yours about your getting even? Then what in thunder did you want to come back here for?"

"To make some money—to get some fun out of it. I wanted to make fools of people; I didn't want to swindle anybody! I thought I was giving 'em something for their money! I—"

Harmon lighted his cigarette, none too complacently.

"The funny part about it," he said slowly, "is that I don't honestly believe you're bluffing. . . . But you knew it was only a prospect."

"But I thought it was a good prospect! Never mind—" He made as though to rise. "You've said enough. I'm through with you!"

The big man's jaw thrust out beligerently, and he caught Hilliard by the arm.

"Now, stop right there! Sit down! Sit down! Maybe you thought it was a good prospect and maybe you didn't, but you're not through with me yet—not until I say so. Don't you make any mistakes like that, my boy. Don't you go off half-shot—not yet! Remember our contract? Ever heard of promoter's liability? I'd certainly hate to see you get into trouble, but if you've made any wild statements about material facts—"

Hilliard was straining half across the table.

"You told me the ore was there! And I thought the worst that could happen would be to tie up this money for a few years—that's why a prospect's so hard to sell! I knew damned well it wasn't any whirlwind right now, but I did think they'd . . . they'd at least make something good out of it . . . eventually . . . even if it . . ."

"Ah!" said Harmon, sneering, "but you had every opportunity to learn the facts—every opportunity. It's not my fault if you went off half-cocked. I don't know what you've represented to your gang up here. I'm not responsible. All I know is that you've collected sixty-two thousand dollars, and I've turned it over to me, and I'm to give you stock for it and pay you a commission in cash. Maybe you call it a commission. Read it carefully, while you're about it. Take it to a lawyer; I don't care. Any lawyer you like. If you've gone beyond the facts I'm mighty sorry for you, but I don't see how it affects me any. Do you?"

Hilliard had slumped wretchedly into his chair; his thoughts were running aimlessly about the grim axis of his chimeras.

"And . . . and after all I've done!" he said thickly. "After all I've said! Oh, my God!" His chin sank low, and his grip on the table relaxed. Harmon was less at ease than he pretended. "Well, if you aren't bluffing," he said presently, "you sure are the biggest baby for a man's-sized man I ever saw. Brace up, there! You—"

final effort, and his fist gestured his accusation.

"You know what I'm going to do about it, don't you?"

"Yes," Harmon nodded, as he drew the smoke deep into his lungs.

"I'm going straight back to those four men, and—"

"No," Harmon wagged his head. "No, you can't very well do that, either—even if you're as shocked as you look. Look at it just a minute . . . look at our contract. There's some loopholes for me you could drive a motortruck through; but you haven't got one as big as a knitting needle. No, son, the best thing for you to do is to take a leave, and go get another sixty thousand while the getting is good."

"Not necessarily," Hilliard's high-pitched laugh was bitter.

Harmon allowed the smoke to eddy gently from his nostrils. "Yes—nec-

McADOO TO URGE WILSON TO ACCEPT RESERVATIONS ON PEACE TREATY

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 2.—The Providence Journal, in a dispatch from its Washington correspondent, will say tomorrow:

In the interest of Democratic party harmony William G. McAdoo has seen or is about to see President Wilson to urge him to consent to ratification of the peace treaty on the basis of the best modifications that can be obtained to the Lodge reservation.

McAdoo has consulted with his close friend and adviser, Bernard M. Baruch, about this, and has told Mr. Baruch that he will speak to the President about it.

Mr. Baruch has told friends that the President appears to him to be following a course with the peace treaty that will force him to seek absolute domination of the convention at San Francisco and either the candidacy for a third term himself or to dictate the candidate and pledge him up to the hilt to his policies, including unreserved ratification of the peace treaty.

Mr. Baruch thinks such a course absolutely impossible, both because of the President's state of health and because of the break in the Democratic ranks it would force.

Obviously, Mr. McAdoo is risking everything as a receptive candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in following this course at the suggestion of Mr. Baruch.

EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT TO BE THE FOOTBALL OF THE 1920 CAMPAIGN

By L. C. MARTIN

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Efforts of the "wets" to inject prohibition into the national campaign are crystallizing in such definite form that politicians here today said that they believed that the liquor fight will be carried to the polls in November. It will be a fight on the issue of beer and light wines—principally beer—as against complete "dryness." It will not be an effort to restore the saloons. It will be an effort to have beer and wine under certain restrictions as to sale, etc.

When the first "wet" voices proposed prohibition both parties scoffed at the idea of prohibition becoming an issue. They said ratification of the 18th amendment killed liquor for a long time to come but they have begun to change their minds because of recent events.

A summary of the "wet" activities shows strength and vigor. These include:

First pouring of petitions by hundreds on members of both houses for modification of the dry laws.

Second, the activities of Governor Edwards of New Jersey including the announcement that he is going to the Democratic convention to fight for the wet platform.

Third, formation in Chicago of an organization to spread propaganda in favor of members of Congress on the beer and light wine platform.

Fourth, intimation that Wm. G. McAdoo will seek the Democratic nomination for President as the "four per cent candidate" and the Federal Internal Revenue Commissioner Roper will manage his campaign.

MEN TURNING TO BOLSHEVISM

Something Profoundly Disquieting in the Constant Repetition of Word Which Seems to Convey Such a Sinister Meaning.

Article XII

By FRANK COMERFORD.

I met a young American major just back from the French front. I had known him for many years. Before the United States entered the war he was one of the many impatient at our delay. He believed that it was our duty to join the fight when the ruthless submarine campaign torpedoed the Lusitania, sending to cold, wet graves American women and children. I distinctly remember his face as he read the headlines in the papers telling of the murderous slaughter of Americans on the high seas. Now when he greeted me he startled me with his first words, "The war is over, I'm a bolshevik." I did not know what the word meant, yet it carried to my mind an impression, and while the impression was hazy, it was clear at least in one particular. It sounded like the confession of a crime.

He had always been of a quiet, conservative type. Before the war one would have judged him to be a pacifist; he was even-tempered, mild of manner, and I still think that before August, 1914, he was a pacifist in head and heart. It was only the call of a just cause, the fight for an ideal in which he believed, that had made him a soldier. In this respect he was typical of 90 per cent of his countrymen.

I had spoken to him the day he enlisted, for he was one of those who volunteered, who might have waited for conscription and claimed a just exemption. He was in the beginning of his married life, with two very young children. By profession he was an engineer. Going to war meant leaving a wife and two babies, leaving a job that promised advancement. I recall his enthusiasm, the intensity of his patriotism, his quiet disregard of the danger to himself. I am sure that there was little hate in his morale. He saw a danger to the world. The honor of his country had been offended against. He was an American, one of those upon whom the duty fell, so he went.

He a bolshevik! Why? I was confounded, confused. The only meaning I gave to his remark was that he was an anarchist. The word "bolshevik" sounded red to me. It fared of the torch, photographed disorder, lawlessness—registered blood, violence, assassination, force, hate, insanity. I wondered how this nine-lettered word had become the vehicle for so many sensations that disturbed peace of mind and sounded alarm.

Where had the word come from and what company had it kept that so fouled its soul? What did it really mean—had it a definite meaning? Was it a bug like the "flu" germ? Had it come among nations to destroy them and to the hearts of men to silence the heavenly message, "Peace on earth, good will to men." Would it come around the world as a scourge? Was it a postscript to the bloody war lesson, prophesying more anguish and tears than four years' fighting had brought? Would the word, coming out of the war bent, now be broken?

Seeking Word's Real Meaning. Or was the meaning that men had read into the word a lie? Was bolshevism the message of a new Messiah being cried down by the money-changers of our time in the same way their ancestors had silenced the word from the Mount and destroyed the Message Bearer with the lash and the cross?

In every mind was the thought and from every tongue fell the word. Russia had given the world a word. It had encircled the globe. Everywhere people were speaking the word—it found lodgment in every brain, a living place in every language. Its use had become universal. The old, the young, rich and poor, the learned, the unlearned, the serious, the simple, the poet, the artist, the poet, and the peddler, the thinker and the thinker, held the thought and spoke the word. Men, women and children spoke the word, read the word, and felt the thought it carried.

To the nine hundred and ninety-nine it was a word of ill-omen, a word of terror and fear. To the one in a thousand it was a word of hope, a light for the feet of a stumbling world, and to nine hundred and ninety-nine said shewiki were dreamers of a strange dream, that twisted idealism had made them mad, that the majority of those who profess faith in bolshevism were sick with a strange, social fever, that they were mischief-makers, never-do-wells, criminals, that they sought to harm the world.

I made up my mind that I would learn the real meaning of the word. The dictionary definition threw no light on its meaning. I came to the conclusion that to learn what bolshevism is I might with wisdom adopt the scientific method used by the doctor of medicine in arriving at a diagnosis. The doctor examines and gathers the symptoms, the meaning of the disease. He then determines what diseases might produce these symptoms. By a process of elimination he discards one possibility after another until at last there is but one disease left, one thing that the symptoms can mean.

I discovered at the outset that most of us have the habit of using terms loosely. Seldom do we give time or thought to the exact, real meaning of things. The meaning of bolshevism is too important to the world not to try to understand it. There is a difference between having the acquaintance of a word and knowing; the former is a mere introduction, the latter an intimacy.

Since the war, when the fastidious diner wearily orders his consommé and the waiter brings it a bit tardily or cold, he thinks to himself, or if courageous enough to speak his mind, he calls the cook a bolshevik. He has found a word to express his irritation. It serves his purpose and at the same time saves his suzer respectability.

See Bolshevism Everywhere.

Once the mind asking for an afternoon off provoked a knowing smile. Her mistress granted the request, charged it up to a possible romance and generally suspected the policeman on the beat. Since the war it is different. The maid is looked upon with suspicion. Her motives are questioned. The request is considered a symptom of the new terrible disease, bolshevism. The mistress thinks to herself: The maid doesn't want to work any more; she is down with the epidemic.

The office boy, working the reliable excuse that his grandmother has died again, to get an afternoon off to go to the ball game, is trying to shirk work, in the opinion of his employer, who formerly, when such an application was made from the same source, chuckled as he granted it, while his memory took him back to his own boyhood days when he used the grandmother yarn to answer the call of the ball field.

Many captains of industry see the symptoms of the new dread in every movement and thought of the workers. The demand for living conditions and decent wages are gradually resolved by minds seared with the thought that it is bolshevism.

The hovers of child labor, looking hatefully at legislation designed to end child slavery, call the leaders of child life conservation bolsheviks. When doctors and public-spirited men and women insist that an irreparable injury is being done the nation in allowing women to work for a period in excess of the hours they are able to work without maiming their motherhood, the profiteers from woman labor cry out: "You are invading the right of contract; your are mad with bolshevism."

Every Sort of Definition.

The wag with the wit of a barber defined bolshevism as a wild idea surrounded by whiskers. The saloon-keeper, hounded over by prohibition, screams "bolshevism." The anti-social leaders come back with the answer, "Your 'personal liberty' cry is only a camouflage for bolshevism."

If anyone disagrees with you, don't grant him the right to an opinion, don't reason with him—just call him a bolshevik. The word has become an epithet, a popular invective, a slur, an insult, an outlet for contempt, contumely and hate. Its pernicious influence our definition of it. Most of us see the Russians with the eyes of the caricaturists, who for so many years have portrayed the Russian as the moujik with high boots, disheveled hair, wild whiskers, the face of an assassin, the body of a terrorist in action, the suggestion of a long dagger smeared with hot blood, under his greatcoat.

If a doctor, making an examination of all of the patients in a hospital, discovered they all had certain symptoms in common, such as temperature, weakness and pain, and because of these findings should diagnose the sickness of all of the patients as pneumonia, the doctor would be regarded a lunatic. Yet there are men in the world today who are as foolish as such a doctor should be. They read every symptom of unrest, without regard to its history, bolshevism.

Not Grandma Used Sage Tea To Darken Her Hair.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

French Dueling Is Dead; HCL And War Killed It

By HENRY WOOD

PARIS, Feb. 15.—(By Mail).—Paris dueling is definitely dead.

This is the consensus of both the French press and the French public following the few sporadic attempts that have taken place since the armistices to revive what was formerly the most picturesque and the most harmless of Parisian sports.

Two causes are conceded to belatedly responsible for the untimely demise of these "affairs of honor," namely the war and the high cost of living.

During the five years of the war the French public became too accustomed to seeing hundreds and thousands of men killed and mutilated to be able to stir up any enthusiasm or interest in a mere skin scratch sustained in a duel.

Secondly, the high cost of living and the depreciated value of currency and fixed fortunes generally has rendered it entirely too expensive an affair to stage a Parisian duel. Without the duel being staged so that the two combatants might get the greatest amount of publicity and social gossip out of it, there is very little object in risking having one's skin scratched and possibly getting infected with sleeping sickness microbes.

According to La Liberté, which recently published an obituary notice of the "duel" affairs of honor at Paris are now being settled in the following manner:

When two "messieurs" get involved in an argument in which the honor of one or the other of them becomes joined, the latter says to the former: "You're a bloody, bow-legged, knocked-kneed, spindle-shank and

war-profitteer," or words to that effect.

"You're a vulgar nouveau riche," replies the aggressor.

"Consider yourself slapped in the face," replies the aggressed.

"Consider your own face equally slapped" retorts the aggressor.

Thereupon, there being absolutely no deeper limit of either insult or injury to which the two can sing, they either turn their backs on each other and walk away, or else shake hands and are reconciled on the spot.

Before the war, of course, the two having got to the point where they had constructively slapped each other's face, seconds were called in, efforts made at reconciliation which always failed, and then with great form and pomp, everyone clad in high silk hats, Prince Albert coats and chrysanthemums in the buttonhole, the whole lot repaired to the fairs wheel on the Champ de Mars and proceeded to have each other's gore.

Before the gore stage was reached however, press photographers took photographs of the two would-be slayers with arms in their hands, the society reporters took down the names of the brilliant gathering of aristocracy and nobility gathered in the offing, and then the two fighters went for each other until one or the other got accidentally, intentionally or purposely scratched.

Thereupon, physicians who had been held in the leash were turned loose. They dashed madly up, ascertained that blood was actually showing through the skin and then in order to prevent any further useless shedding of "useless blood"—according to the point of view, the whole affair was reluctantly terminated.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

"The Private Secretary"

The first of the series of school plays to be given by the classes of High school will be presented by the Sophomore class Friday evening. The boys and girls who comprise the cast of characters have been working diligently so that they might acquire themselves like real actors when the test of their ability comes Friday evening.

"The Private Secretary" is a play that has been given with great success by various professional and amateur companies. In the plot Douglas Cattermole, nephew of a wealthy gentleman from India, is urged by his uncle to sow his wild oats. This he readily consents to do, but by masquerading as the Rev. Robert Spalding who is the "Private Secretary" to Mr. Marseland, master of a large country estate. In the role of the Reverend Spalding is helped by his young friend Harry Marseland.

In the course of unraveling the character tangle, many complications arise which present most ridiculous situations.

The Sophomores who have charge of the sale of tickets report that there is great demand for seats. This is not more than is to be expected for it is traditional with Clearfield that its people enjoy home talent plays—and especially so when the talent is composed of the boys and girls of school.

Reservations for seats may be made Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at three forty-five in the High School building. There is no charge for reserved seats.

Cardinal Manning

The middle of the nineteenth century saw a great movement in England toward the Church of Rome. Among the many well-known converts was Henry E. Manning, who had been a clergyman in the Church of England for over fifteen years. He entered the Roman priesthood and was ultimately made cardinal archbishop of Westminster. He died January 14, 1902.

Strange Animals

Those quaint box hedges, which one sometimes sees nowadays in the British Isles, cut out on the top into curious little shapes of birds and animals, are of exceedingly ancient lineage. Pliny the Younger in describing the garden of one of his villas mentions "animals in box, facing each other," and this was perhaps in about the year 100 A. D.

Many Still Read Dickens

Charles Dickens has been rated by a class of the younger literary critics as a decided back number, but the statement by his British publishers that during the past three years the sale of his books has been almost doubled seems to refute that idea. Some of Dickens' novels sell more than 50,000 every year, and he has been dead forty-eight years. His sales during the last ten years have been larger, it is asserted, than those of any three novelists put together.

Pick a Do Family Wash

Among the titanic pirates of Morocco the women do all the agricultural and other hard work, while the men, when at home, do the cooking and mend the clothes, including the women's.

"For years I have tried," said Eddie McBride, "to learn how a husband was won. When her cheek said one day—'I've found the best way'—Was to give all my love—Gordon Gray."

How Seeds Are Distributed.
Among the most curious methods of seed distribution are those seeds which are carried through the air on wings, such as the maple, which has two wings, and the catkins, the elm, the ash and the pine. These seeds do not flap their wings like birds, but depend altogether upon the force of the wind to carry them along. Other floating seeds are the milkweed, the dandelion and the dandelion.

Is Largest Tunnel.
The longest railway tunnel on the American continent is the Rogers pass tunnel on the Rocky mountain division of the Canadian Pacific line, which is five miles in length and runs under Mount McDonald, in the Selkirk range. It was constructed at a cost of more than $10,000,000.

To see a funeral, a coffin or a corpse in one's dreams generally portends an illness, death, or some grave misfortune. If the dream is rather vague and hazy, it may often be regarded as a sign of birth or a marriage.

IF BACKACHE OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take a glass of Salts to flush out kidneys—Drink plenty water.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urino-waste or you'll be a real sick person, shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomachache gets sour tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

You can save time and steps if you have an Evryday Beechwood combination coal and gas range in your kitchen.

A quick breakfast is easy to get on the gas section. An elaborate dinner can all be cooked at once by using coal and gas at the same time. There are two complete ovens—one coal and one gas—a gas broiling oven and eight holes in the top. More cooking room, yet the Evryday Beechwood occupies no more space than a plain range.

The combination range comes in plain and enameled models. Three colors of enamel—blue, black, and brown. The polished tops can be cleaned with an oiled cloth; the enamel with a damp one—no blacking necessary. An enameled range is a work saver. Come in and see them.

THE SUNDERED TIE

By ALLEN CHAPMAN

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

Once a year, in the latter part of June, Mabel Trescott spent two weeks with her mother. Once a year—it was at the holiday season—her father came to Euston, put up at the local hotel for half a week and saw a good deal of his daughter during that time. For eight years Mabel had practically lived at the Euston seminary except for these breaks. It was just after her sixteenth birthday that she solved for the first time in her life the mystery of the strange separation of husband and wife since she was a little baby. Her mother had never told her. A stern, joyless woman, when the subject was broached she said, austere: "We could not agree and it was for the best."

"My child," he had said sorrowfully, "your mother is a peculiar woman, and I probably made a mistake in taking her from the farm home where all her life was centered."

Later a schoolmate, who had learned the real story from her mother, related it to Mabel. "Your mother had been brought up in a quiet, congenial family," she said. "For a year she and your father seemed contented and happy. Then you were born and your mother grew homesick for the old folks and the old life. She hated the city. She insisted that your father return with her to the old farm. In vain he pleaded that it would be at the sacrifice of a promising business career. Your mother made a home visit and—never returned."

Mabel was seventeen years old when an annual visit of her father came around. She was restless and excited on this occasion, and he noticed it. She had introduced to him a favorite school friend, Nellie Roberts, and then her brother, Harold. Both attracted the liking of Mr. Trescott.

"A very charming young lady, Mabel," he told his daughter, "and an equally fine young man."

"Oh! I am so glad you think so," cried Mabel, ecstatic over the trap she had led him into. "Dear papa, mamma likes him, too, and after our graduation next June, please may I marry him?"

There was no resisting that loving heart, but when the wedding had come and gone and the happy pair settled down in a town near the farm where the mother lived, Mr. Trescott felt lonely and dissatisfied. So long had he been parted from his wife that he feared she might resent a visit on his part to his daughter's home, and he never went there, despite constant invitations. At the end of two years, however, there came an urgent letter from Mabel.

"I want to see you, papa," she wrote, "and so does Harold, and so does the dearest little baby grandchild in the world. We have named her Sarah, after mamma, and she looks like you. It is all arranged that you are to come to us next Wednesday and stay over the week-end, and oh, we will all be so happy!"

Not a word was said of Mrs. Trescott, and her husband judged that Mabel too fully understood the situation to embarrass them by having them under the same roof at the same time. More than that, he did not believe that his wife would consent to break in upon the strange silence that he had so patiently borne. In all charity he had accepted the general decision that she was a notional, peculiar woman.

He was enchanted by his welcome at the Roberts home. He had said that Harold was "a fine young man," and he indeed presented the semblance of a model son-in-law. Their little home was a paradise, the baby the most wonderful creature the world had ever loved. Comfort, serenity, perfect love filled the little cottage, and as he was shown to his room Mr. Trescott experienced memories that particularly sweetened the occasion.

Strongly was he reminded of the blissful year when his wife had revealed herself as the typically perfect housekeeper. A bureau drawer gave out an odor of sweet lavender that reminded him of Sarah, the smell of apples in another wafted a like memory of those lost days, and the aroma of newly baked bread wrapped in a towel evoked him a longing, cherished sensation that fairly suggested the home he had not known for years, but here was its glowing counterpart.

And then the meal! Had Mabel duplicated those old-time dinners when he and Sarah had been so happy? He expressed himself with a choking sensation, his emotion over coming him as after the meal he whispered to his daughter:

"Mabel dear, it seems as if I had come back home after all the years of weary waiting!"

"Father, it will be that, indeed, if you will have it so. Somebody is waiting for you after all the years—oh! forgive me and love!"

She had gently pushed open a door and the mystery of those old memories was explained. There, near the kitchen table, sat Sarah Trescott, looking to the little babe in her arms. Her eyes met those of her husband in one soft, longing, half-frenzied glance. Then they dropped, and the tears came. She was the suppliant but he would not have it so. He knelt beside her and drew her head to his shoulder where it belonged.

Oh! That Back of Mine!

It is many a woman's complaint for it seems as though it would break—feet swell too sometimes and head buzzes. This is often due to the uric acid which accumulates in the system.

Naturally when the kidneys are deranged the blood is filled with poisonous waste matter, which settles in the feet, ankles and wrists; or under the eyes in bag-like formations.

Often there is pain in back or limbs.

As a remedy for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation caused by uric acid—as scalding urine, backache and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gout, it is simply wonderful how quickly Dr. Pierce's Anurie acts, when you take this new kidney remedy of Dr. Pierce's the pains and stiffness rapidly disappear, for "Anurie" (anti-uric-acid) is many times more potent than lithia and often eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar, thus removing rheumatism and lumbago.

Montrose, Pa.—"When I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Anurie I could hardly go up and down stairs. I had to put one foot up and then drag the other up, I had such a lame hip, but now I can run up and down as well as I ever did in my life. Had suffered with indigestion 25 or 30 years—was almost afraid to eat, but now I can eat almost anything and have gained seven pounds. I took the 'Medical Discovery,' 'Anurie Tablets,' and one vial of 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

SPRING FLUFFS AND FRILLS

BY MARGARET RHOE
(Written for The United Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Such fuss and feathers, fluffs and frills will deck our gals this Spring in time-mongers truly feminine we'll not overlook a thing. The tiny ribbon ruching and the fluting soft of silk, the puffings and the scolloppings and bandings of that silk will edge the many flounces and the panner and puff that set about the hip line till its quite bouffant enough.

A most attractive model, a baby blue in tinge, is trimmed in rows and rows and rows of narrow, silken fringe. The fringe, uncut, has silken loops and its cerulean, too, but once within its dainty folds, no maiden could be blue. Of tulle this frock is built, fringed panners at each side, a fitted bodice, elbow sleeves and neck low, square and wide.

The fitted bodice is the thing. It really comes to stay whether it is with or without the stay it's welcomed either way. Some high necked are some cut so low that they are all cut up. The high ones snugly fit the throat then flare your chins to cup. The low cut ones affect the square or else the oval line and wear a bit of hand made lace of texture super fine. The slip on blouse is also good in any stuff at all that has an Oriental touch, a bit of Chinese shawl or gold and silver tulle or Batiks, beauteous. These blouses reach just to the hips in manner rather stunted. The knitted silks with metal threads are used perhaps the most to make these striking garments and you'll see of them a host worn usually with pleated skirts of chiffon or Georgette, in fact, replete with pleats, we'll be which will deplete you but, you, bank roll to indulge in. They are expensive quite and yet if you don't own a pleated skirt you can't be in our set. A rival of the pleated skirt is one all flounced galore with Spanish lace in full some grace of flounce, three or more but these aren't worn with separate waists then bodice is the one of lace or else of cotton unless they do maintain a chic artistic contrast with velvet bodice tight that has short sleeves and low cut neck and makes you look at it with some of painting by Spaulding. Vela great especially in a Spanish comb is perched atop your pate. And then the veil—on all females it springs will can a coat. Salome's patty seven could it do any more. The larger and more flowing these frilly waists can be the more appealing. The Or Spanish lace they cover naturally of large and floppy in form or else round the turban shape they gathered taut and trim to drip and flutter down behind and in many in the breeze. Some only to the waist attain while some reach to the knees. Come take the veil they never fail.

Holworthy Hall

"You think I'll raise my finger after this, except to . . . what do you take me for?"

"I take you," said Harmon deliberately, "for a short-sighted young man in a mighty bad spot. You don't want these folks up here to know the whole truth, do you? It wouldn't hurt me any—but after the record you made here before you got yourself kicked out two years ago. . . . Oh! don't jump! You don't think I've been asleep, do you? . . . I don't believe you'd get much sympathy. Not much! And I've invested a lot of money in you. . . . I want some big returns. Look me in the eye, son. I want you to calm down. Now, there's only three parties to this deal—you and me and the world. You and me—and the world. Get that? And you and I have got to play straight with each other. You help me get the money, and I'll help you get whatever you want. But when you throw me down, I throw you down, and we'll see who comes out ahead. I'll bet I do. What do you bet?"

Hilliard shook his head helplessly. "You've got to remember," said Harmon in sardonic consolation, "that you're an awful easy man to describe. You can slip out of Syracuse just as easy as you please, and try your darnedest to make a getaway, and you'd have pretty hard work to keep away from the Pinkertons for twenty-four hours. And I've got the evidence that would put 'em after you. So don't you plan to run away, son—don't do it."

Hilliard's judgment was tottering. Where did he stand in relation to Armstrong now?

"Well?" Harmon snatched at the sign of weakness, and was instantly persuasive.

"Stay on another six weeks; make the rest of your killing. After this is over, do what you please. You'll have money enough to suit yourself. I'm playing straight with you . . . and I not?"

"Yes," said Hilliard, with withering sarcasm, "you are!"

Harmon glowered at him. "Don't you accuse me of double-crossing you, son! It's the other way round."

"You aren't fool enough to expect me," said Hilliard shakily, "to keep on trying to sell more of this rotten stuff! You aren't enough of a fool for that!"

"I can, and I do. You're in for it now, Hilliard, and you can't very well go back. You've collected money; you can't get your hands on it again; you can't make any restitution. You've lied your head off already; you can't do any better now than to stick to your first story, because the truth's a good deal worse. You'd better make your killing and make it quick. And if you open your head for just one little peep . . . floozy, floozy, and the fat's in the fire. Well . . ."

Hilliard's head was splitting with the horror of it. He saw, in a whirling vision of dread, the people of the city rising to denounce him; not merely for his inexcusable masquerade, so grotesquely built upon the dream of regeneration, not only for his vast abuse of personal confidence, but only for the base hypocrisy he had practiced upon his quondam sweetheart, but also for this grossly profitable fraud. Dimly, he argued just as Harmon claimed, he couldn't be in harder straits. A spasm of reckless fatalism shook him.

Harmon, who had been inspecting him critically, took out his fountain pen.

"I'll write you your check for commissions—shall I?" He held the pen poised menacingly. "And then we'll

For the Stork Airplane Passenger

When the single passenger of that oldest airplane—the stork—glides to earth, he expects to find everything in readiness for his comfort at least. But often he finds waiting all sorts of splendid affairs in the way of carriages, cradles or bassinets, of the degree of daintiness and luxury revealed in the picture above, in which muslins, ribbons and frills make a resting place quite fit for an angel. This bassinette is of wicker enameled in white and has a hood of white dotted swiss finished with frills edged with lace. It is mounted on a wooden carriage, also white enameled, and having narrow rubber tires, so that it is easy to move his babyship about the room or sleeping porch or wherever he takes his protracted naps. Very wide and soft satin ribbon in pink or blue is used for making the several full bows which serve as flags of welcome and signs of honor for the new arrival.

A bassinette of this kind is more convenient than a cradle, but not a downright necessity like the layette. This latter has been arranged by outfitters of infants to include all the baby can possibly need, but they state the list following to be the "irreducible minimum." Three bands, three skirts, four pinning blankets, four flannel skirts, six lawn skirts, six slips, three dozen diapers, four pairs silk and wool stockings, one baby blanket. For the winter baby, knit or eiderdown jackets are added to these articles.

Extra dresses, bonnets, cloaks and booties are added to the layette when the baby is old enough to get out of doors, a time that arrives early in his career. Baby clothes are simply made; fine lawn and batiste the favorite cotton materials, and the trimming of the narrowest and daintiest laces, needlework and dainty embroidery, all sparingly used. Handwork is the hallmark of excellence in the layette. As for the baby's health, his Uncle Sam has provided pamphlets on all sorts of subjects that the inexperienced mother may use as a guide.

forget this little misunderstanding, and start fresh. Shall I? Let's see," with great attentiveness to the figures. "Your twenty per cent is twelve thousand four hundred, and that, less half expense . . . call 'em five thousand expense . . . that's seventy-four hundred." He tore a sheet from his pocket check book, dried the ink by waving it in the air, and flitted it over to Hilliard. "Put it away and let's have some lunch. If you're afraid to have your friends see me down here, let's have it upstairs. I'm not sensitive, son; it don't pay."

"That's the idea! Now you're talking sense! Come on, son, buck up and let's have some lunch. . . ."

At eight o'clock in the evening, when Rufus Waring knocked at Hilliard's door, it was opened by a man with a face to remember afterward. There were deep-cut lines—almost furrows—by the mouth and eyes; and the eyes themselves were startlingly luminous, and drawn. The man's complexion was chalk-white.

"Why, Mr. Hilliard!" exclaimed Waring. "What on earth's the matter with you?"

"Come on in," said Hilliard, and his smile was ghastly. "I've been waiting for you."

Cheap and Pretty Homes.

One of the most interesting exhibits at the British Dairy association show was a four-room cottage, complete, with large entrance hall, carriage porch to the nearest freight station, priced at $875. The house is made of asbestos—a compound of asbestos and cement—and the manufacturers describe it as "weather-proof, ratproof and damp-proof." A charming little week-end cottage of two rooms is offered at $375.

Fatal Timidity.

Every day sends to the grave obscure men who have remained in obscurity only because their timidity, their lack of self-confidence, prevented them from making a first effort. If they could have been induced to begin; if they had trusted in their own powers and dared to forge ahead they could, in all probability, have gone great lengths in careers of usefulness and fame.—Orison Sweet Marden.

Gold Bricks.

A gold brick, of the kind sold by clever swindlers to "easy marks," is a product of highly skilled workmanship. It is made of copper, alloyed with a little zinc, and is painted with red gold to which some mercury has been added. This gives a very smooth and satisfactory effect; and the mercury being evaporated by heat, a final varnish of "gilding wax" lends an attractive luster.

Fish Shoots Its Prey.

A shooting-fish in the East Indies has a hollow cylindrical beak. When it sees a fly on plants that grow in shallow streams it ejects a single drop of water, which knocks the fly into the tide.

How Much You Should Weigh.

A simple way to ascertain one's ideal weight was told recently by Dr. Harvey G. Beck of the University of Maryland, in an address before the Los Angeles County Medical association at Los Angeles, Cal. First, put down 110. Then multiply by 5/8 the number of inches by which one's height exceeds five feet. Add the result of the multiplication to the original 110 and the sum is one's "ideal weight."—Popular Science Monthly.

Early Egyptian Ruins.

The kings of the earliest dynasties reared no pyramids. Their tombs were great structures mainly underground, that of Aha (who is possibly Menes, the first king of Egypt), at Nagada measures 175 feet by 85, and contains 21 chambers—built sometimes of brick, with a lining of wood, and sometimes doored with stone, as in the case of the tomb of King Den at Abydos, whose granite floor furnishes the earliest known example of the use of stone in building.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Fitting a Bear With New Teeth. A grizzly bear may wear out his teeth, just the same as a human being. When he needs new ones he gets them, particularly in America. More animal dentistry has been done here than in any other country. Once, when an old pet bear belonging to the owner of a well-known menagerie was fitted with a complete set of false teeth, it was necessary to glue the plates to the bear's mouth to keep them in place.

Primrose Legend.

The primrose is an oracle in love affairs. Let youth or maid pull the flower, and after cutting off the tops of the stems, lay it in a secret place. Let youth dream through the night of his sweetheart. Upon looking at it the next day, if he find the stems shot out to their former height, success will attend; if not, disappointment.

New Orleans Cemeteries.

Surrounded as it is on three sides by the Mississippi and on the fourth by Lake Pontchartrain, no wonder New Orleans must bury its dead above-ground! Even a shallow grave becomes a well. The cemeteries, with their wildernesses of stone and marble tombs, are one of the sights of the city.

The Seven Seas.

Did Kipling consult Hindu mythology when choosing the title for his well-known book, "The Seven Seas"? According to the Puranas, the earth is circular and flat, like the flower of a water lily. Its circumference is 1,000,000,000 miles. In the center is Mount Sumeroo.

The Business Part.

A dog had bitten a child in our neighborhood, and we were discussing the incident. One neighbor informed us that the dog was part poodle and part bull. Frank, who had listened eagerly to the conversation, turned to his mother and asked: "Mother, which part bit him?"—Exchange.

HOT WATER FOR SICK HEADACHES

Tells why everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast.

Headaches are caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head, producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilid, aspirin or the bromides, which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drunk before breakfast will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache, but will cleanse, purify and freshen the alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar. If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphate hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Great Little Explainer.

No matter what trouble Tommy gets into, he always manages to offer some sort of excuse, until even his little sister is on to him. The other day he dropped her doll and broke it. Before he had time to open his mouth she exclaimed in an angry voice: "There, now, I saw you did it, so don't try to make an excuse."

Big Consumption of Molasses.

Approximately 75,000,000 gallons of molasses are used annually in the manufacture of feeds.

in from all responsibility for alleged improper use of poisons to kill vermin, and in addition cites the fact that promiscuous poisoning should be discouraged at all times, which is in entire accord with the policy of the Game Commission. Since the closely restricted operations of the Game Commission in destroying vermin are confined to the winter months following the close of the game season the possible harm to sportsmen through consuming game birds that might have eaten strychnine is entirely eliminated.

In conclusion I desire to say that in the interest of game and wild bird protection, as well as to protection to dogs being legally used by sportsmen, a special effort will be made by the Game Commission to apprehend and prosecute unscrupulous persons responsible for the improper use of poisons anywhere outside of buildings. Your co-operation to this end is respectfully solicited.

Respectfully Yours,

sons make a practise of destroying if possible every hunting dog taken into that territory because in their opinion the hunting dogs are responsible for the scarcity of game of various kinds. The method usually employed by such miscreants is poison of various kinds and all officers of the Department are instructed to pay special attention to all reports of this kind, in an endeavor to apprehend and prosecute such persons to the limit of the law.

Use of Poison by Trappers.

In some parts of Pennsylvania a limited number of persons interested in killing fur-bearing animals for their furs as well as the bounty offered by the Commonwealth, are apparently using poison in their work and sometimes unintentionally destroy domestic animals, even their own dogs, as was the case in Clinton county recently, and when this occurs they protest most vociferously against what they have been told is the practise of the Game Commission in order to cast suspicion on the officers of the Department rather than themselves. I am satisfied, however, that only a small percentage of the people interested in obtaining furs are resorting to the use of poison and that this practise is not general as some of our people were led to believe. An examination of all the skins of animals on which a bounty is offered sent to the Game Commission at Harrisburg during the past year indicates that less than one percentum of the animals so presented were killed through the use of poison, the evidence of which is readily noticeable on the flesh side of every pelt taken in this manner.

Unauthorized Persons to be Prosecuted.

While the writer is confident the practise of placing poison outside of buildings for various purposes is not general throughout the Commonwealth, in order to break up such practise wherever it may be in vogue it is the purpose of the Game Commission to bring legal action against unauthorized individuals under the Act of May 23rd, 1878, which specifically prohibits individuals from placing poison "anywhere outside of buildings for the purpose of killing any wild bird or animal," if there is evidence indicating that beneficial wild life has been destroyed.

If practises of this sort cannot otherwise be curbed, druggists who carelessly dispense poisons in violation of law will likewise face prosecution.

Federal Investigation.

In response to several petitions from Pennsylvania, alleging the destruction of large numbers of beneficial migratory birds through the use of poison by the Game Commission and individuals in Pennsylvania, a representative of the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., recently made a careful investigation. The report made to the Chief of that Bureau reads in part as follows:

"The present poisoning operations of the State Game Commission are conducted in a careful manner, both against crows and certain mammals.

"No recent or specific cases of bird destruction were reported or witnessed.

"The secondary poisoning of persons killing gallinaceous game birds after they have fed on poisoned grain placed for vermin from experience is either impossible or very improbable."

This report thus clearly exonerates the Game Commission of Pennsylvania

"FROM HAND TO MOUTH"

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

There was a peaceful, benevolent smile on the face of John Mayhew as he sat down in the waiting room of a large city depot until his suburban train was ready. The smile was habitual with him, generated by youthful association for years in his business life. Now, he had retired, young as he was, and it was declared that his happy, indulgent spirit was the outcome of conducting an establishment specializing in children's garments.

He had about everything that could conduce to comfort and luxury except a wife. In the race for money he had never had time to choose one. Just now as a young lady of peculiar grace and loveliness regarded him with mute inquiry, his encouraging return glance seemed to inspire her with confidence. "Will you kindly keep an eye on my suitcase for a few moments?" she inquired timidly. "I have an errand to a store across the road."

"I shall be pleased," nodded Mayhew, and as she arose, followed her with his glance, noting that she was rather poorly dressed, but tracing in her bearing the attributes of a cultured lady. In an idle reverie he attempted to construct mentally the life history of the girl and studied the worn suitcase which suggested long use through the past.

Fifteen minutes went by, and Mayhew began to grow uneasy. His train was called, departed. A second one—an hour went by. His dilemma upset him, quite. What could have detained the young lady? Could there be some trick in leaving him to guard her luggage? He gingerly lifted the suitcase. Something jingled inside, suggesting mechanism. A bomb! Mayhew drew back suspiciously. The depot agent approached and spoke to him, first consulting a slip of paper in his hand and scanning Mayhew closely.

"Did a young lady leave some baggage in your charge about an hour ago?" inquired the station man.

"Why, yes," replied Mayhew, relievedly.

You are described in a telephone message received from a hospital. That must be the satchel referred to. It belongs to a Miss Ava Roylston. She was run down by an automobile just outside. Not seriously hurt, but booked for a few days. She requests that the suitcase be sent to her."

"Run down by an automobile!" repeated Mayhew, quite shocked.

"Wishes the suitcase? What hospital is it?" I will take it to her at once."

A generous impulse moved him as his memory framed that interesting face and he felt censured at having suspected that he was the victim of a scheme.

Within the hour Mayhew was at the hospital. The physician in charge of Miss Roylston relieved his anxiety with the statement that his patient was only slightly bruised.

"If you are a friend, you had better see her," he suggested. "The young lady is very much perturbed as to how she shall get word to her father without such alarming him."

Ava Roylston reached out an eager hand to clasp that of Mayhew when she realized his thoughtfulness in her behalf. There were tears of gratitude in her lovely eyes.

"To think I left you there in the depot waiting all that time, and missing your train and coming way up here with my suitcase," she began, but Mayhew led the conversation at once to her home and relatives.

"You live at Norton," he said. "That is the next station to mine. Take no care on your mind, Miss Roylston. I will see your father and will come here tomorrow, if I may, to see how you are getting along and to attend to any errands you may have left undone."

John Mayhew went to bed later that night feeling that he had done a good day's work. He had located the poor, humble home of the Roylstons, learning that the father was a struggling inventor, and that they had been living from hand to mouth for years. The old genius was engrossed in perfecting a new order of flying machine. Meantime, to keep the wolf from the door, he told Mayhew, he had devised a toy for children, a ball that would walk in quite a natural way. As he produced these his daughter would dress them and take them to the city to sell to the toy dealers. One of these constituted the contents of the suitcase.

When John Mayhew entered the hospital next morning a pleasant sight greeted him. Miss Roylston was sitting up in a wheel chair at a table near the cots occupied by two little children. She was gratifying them to a degree of delirious joy as she started one of the walking dolls around the table. It was with the eye of a keen business man that Mayhew examined one of the dolls as to mechanism and selling ability.

Life had a new meaning for him the rest of that week. He saw utility, a value in the pretty toy, and amazed Richard Roylston by offering him a goodly sum for control of the patent.

There was no living "hand to mouth" at the Roylston home after that. And one day, after a long conversation with Ava, John Mayhew left her home with a happy heart. He had asked her to become his wife and told her to think over the proposal till the next day. There was no need for it. As he left her home, hand to mouth, the lovely Ava blew him a kiss, and he anticipated her formal reply later.

An American Workman Discusses The Coming Of A Revolution

the man who runs the corner grocery.

My education has been neglected, and I know very little of the proper way in which to handle the English or any other language, but I did my best in telling them what I thought of an American who would uphold a foreign leech in his anarchist doctrine; a doctrine that would destroy the very land that gave the same leech his liberty.

Some time ago I heard a man on a Hog Island car say: "I have got drunk, and it is nobody's damn business. I will get drunk again when I feel like it. I am going to drink just as long as I can buy, borrow or steal booze, and I am going to teach my children to drink. And what do you think of that?"

About a month later I happened to be on the same car with this man again, but this time he had another hobby.

He said: "I am an anarchist and don't care who knows it. I am going to wave the red flag. There are ninety-five men in here (by the register) and I will bet that 75 per cent. of them will agree with me."

Just then the conductor rang up the hundredth fare, and he called their attention to the 100 and claimed that seventy-five of them were ready face, these pests and cowards. So to wave the red flag with him. His "call their hand" and watch them scheme was to have all the working men in the United States go on strike for six months, and by that time every capitalist would be dead, property would all belong to the working man, pork chops would be 10 cents per pound, with the prices of other things in proportion.

Just who would be producing the pork chops while the strike was on he failed to say. No doubt, he overlooked that little detail.

I have been hearing this kind of talk for almost two years. I have fought it all I could in a small way but I have yet to hear another man who happened to be with a bunch of these hoodlums raise his voice in defense of his country and government.

Do not say that these hoodlums are or a living without work.

There might be a revolution, for there might be "damn fools" enough here to start one, but the "revolvers" will find more good American citizens ready to oppose them than they dreamed were in the U. S. A., and among those citizens will be those who have been successful, thanks to their own ambition and the opportunities of their adopted country. And facing this army, the anarchist's dream of a revolution will be along the shores of much as he ever made in any foreign land; or, what is worse yet, listen to two great oceans; and there will be some American, who has had all the advantages this, the best country in the world affords, advocate a revolution and the abolition of the government that protects them all!

The biggest coward in the world is a brave man in a mob; but, face to face with Philadelphia, Feb. 23.

Many of these men do not read, who might have some influence with this class, does not work directly with this class of workers, and as a consequence does not hear the things that the man who works with these anarchists hears.

Yes, I come in contact with many of these men who could never be reached through the newspapers or magazines. These are the men who are ever ready to listen to any propaganda that speaks of profit and plunder.

There might be a revolution, for there might be "damn fools" enough here to start one, but the "revolvers" will find more good American citizens ready to oppose them than they dreamed were in the U. S. A., and among those citizens will be those who have been successful, thanks to their own ambition and the opportunities of their adopted country. And facing this army, the anarchist's dream of a revolution will be along the shores of much as he ever made in any foreign land; or, what is worse yet, listen to two great oceans; and there will be some American, who has had all the advantages this, the best country in the world affords, advocate a revolution and the abolition of the government that protects them all!

MILLION DOLLAR ROAD BOND PROPOSAL APPROVED BY GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION

PLAN MERITS SUPPORT OF ALL OUR CITIZENS

LECTION OF HON. PETER GEARHART

A MOST ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING

field County Good Roads Association
held in the court house yesterday was
attended by nearly two hundred good
roads enthusiasts from every section of the county.

The meeting was called to order
in the Arbitration Room at 1:45
o'clock, but the crowd was so large it
was found necessary to adjourn to
the court room.

President Leitzinger presided and
his annual report detailing the past
year's accomplishments demonstrated that the Association was on the
job all the time and is entitled to a great deal of credit for the splendid
road program being worked out by
the State Highway department and
county commissioners in the county.

Following the remarks of the President on motion the chair appointed
a nominating committee of five members to prepare and present a list of
the officers to be nominated and elected
for the coming year. The committee follows: J. D. Connelly, Clear-
field; Charles G. Gill, Lawrence; W. B.
Stephenson, Mahaffey; Walter Hat-
ton, DuBois, and Dr. H. H. Lewis, of Surveyor. The committee reported
the following nominations:

Clearfield R. D.

Vice Presidents—A. E. Leitzinger,
Clearfield; James W. Ruffner, Ma-
dona; W. B. Stephenson, Mahaffey;
E. C. Faust, LeCombe's Mills; J. R.
Osburn, DuBois.

Secretary—John M. Bain, of Clear-
field.

Treasurer—H. S. Whiteman, Jr., of Clearfield.

Thomas R. McDowell, field representative of the State Highway Department, was then introduced and
talked at some length on the policy
and program of the Highway department. The speaker told what was being done for Clearfield county
roads by the state but said the county
must not expect the state to do it all.

He then mentioned the counties in
the state which had already voted for
county bond issues for road building
purposes and urged Clearfield county
to do likewise.

Mr. McDowell's remarks made a
profound impression upon his hear-
ers and he was heartily applauded
at the close.

Hon. Joseph E. Phillips of Clearfield, then offered the following
resolution:

Clearfield County Good Roads Association held a year ago a resolution
was passed and presented to the
county commissioners asking them to
present to the people of the county
the question of a million dollar bond
issue for road purposes at the coming
election; and

passed and presented by other local
road associations and organizations
interested in roads; and

Whereas the matter was not reached at the elections of the year now
passed;

And whereas, a new board of
county commissioners has been elected to office, and at the advice of their
attorney, desire a further expression
of the wishes of the people of the
county on the question of presenting
this matter to the voters at the coming election.

Now, Therefore, be it Resolved,
that wa, the Clearfield County Good Roads Association, in convention assembled, request of the present board

of county commissioners that they
proceed to present to the people of Clearfield county by proper and legal
steps the question of the issuance of
a million dollar bond issue for road
purposes to be voted upon at the
spring election, May 18, 1920.

After considerable discussion the
resolution was adopted by a unanimous rising vote, although several
of the Mahaffey and Bell township
representatives refrained from voting. The delegation from this section was more or less disgruntled
over their road situation. Last year
the State Highway department and
county commissioners at the request
of the Good Roads Association agreed
to construct two miles of road between Mahaffey and McGee's Mills
on the fifty-fifty plan, in order to
eliminate the most dangerous road
proposition in the county. Since that time the road in question has been
taken over by the state as a deferred
primary road and as that means nothing doing for five years at least the
upriver fellows are peeved and justly
so. In order, that the difficulty may
be solved and the condition remedied
Dr. J. Frank Rowles of Mahaffey,
offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The efforts of local interests to eliminate the dangerous crossing on the part of Route No. 62 between McGee's Mills and Mahaffey
borough have so far been unsuccessful.

And Whereas, This same section of
highway receives all the travel of two
main highway systems passing thru
the gap at the junction of Chest creek
with the Susquehanna river,

Therefore, be it Resolved, that this
association hereby approves the ac-
placing this piece of highway under
construction on a 50-50 basis with
the State Highway department.

On motion of Hon. Joseph E. Phillips the resolution was unanimously
adopted without debate.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was taken up and the
nominations as presented by the
unanimously chosen to the different
offices.

President Gearhart was called to
the chair, and after a brief address,
in which he pointed out the necessity
for united and aggressive action for
the coming year, announced the ap-
committee:

District No. 1—Clearfield borough,
Lawrence and Goshen townships—
John C. Forsyth, Clearfield, Chair-
man.

No. 2—Girard, Covington and Kar-
thaus townships—Haskell V. Kunes.

No. 3—Morris and Graham town-
ships—C. B. Maxwell.

No. 4—Wallaceton borough, Boggs
and Bradford townships—A. C. Lan-
sberry, Bigler.

boroughs, Decatur township—R. H.
Thompson, Osceola Mills.

No. 6—Houtzdale and Brisbin boroughs, Woodward township—Dr. A.
H. Pigeon, Houtzdale.

No. 8—Irvona, Coalport and Glen
Hope boroughs, Beccaria township—

Burnside and Westover boroughs, Chest township—Blaine Byers, New Washington.

No. 10—Ramey borough, Bigler and Guelich townships—Chas. G. Gill, Ma-
dona.

STATE COLLEGE PA., March 3.—
With the return to college last fall
of hundreds of Penn State students
who had dropped their studies to enter the service, faculty members looked for a general slump in studies. In
all departments, as a reaction from
the excitement of war. However, the results of the first half-year's work,
completed recently, show the opposite
effect, and only about one per cent.
of the students have found it necessary to drop their studies. This is
a much smaller number of failures
than was recorded in the average
year before the war, and the instructors are led to believe that there is a
tendency on the part of most students
of their college work.

General conditions about the college show that since the war students
in all kinds of campus activities. The
college is fairly alive with groups doing anything from playing basketball
league games to producing a variety
of amateur theatricals. The graduation of a large "way class" several
weeks ago reduced the college enrollment by more than one hundred, but
former students returning to com-
figure to within a score of 3,000.

STOCK OPENINGS

NEW YORK, March 3.—Prices
were irregular at the opening of the
stock market today, but variations
from yesterday's close were fraction-
al. The only stock which changed
more than a point was Baldwin,
which opened at 110, gaining 1-8.
Central Leather opened at 77 1-8 off
1-4, Union Pacific at 29 1-4, unchanged,
United States Rubber at 95 1-2
up 5-8.

No. 11—Lumber City borough, Jordan,
Knox and Ferguson townships—
C. S. Strong, Ansonville.

No. 12—Mahaffey borough, Bell
and Greenwood townships—G. W.
Hatch, Mahaffey, R. D.

No. 13—Curwensville borough and Pike township—R. D. Swoope, Cur-
wensville.

No. 14—Grampian borough, Penn
and Pike townships—Hon. D. D. Miller, Grampian.

No. 15—Sandy and Huston town-
ships—F. M. Timlin.

No. 16—Troutville borough, Union
and Brady townships—C. H. Good-
lander, DuBois, R. D.

No. 17—Cooper township—R. H.
Sommerville, Winburne.

Following the adjournment of the
meeting the Mahaffey and McGee's
delegation had a meeting with the
of that meeting all hands left at 1:15
today for Harrisburg where they will
meet Highway Commissioner Sadler
and endeavor to have satisfactory adjustment made of the Mahaffey and McGee's snarl.

GAME COMMISSION STATES POSITION ON PLACING OF POISON FOR VERMIN

For several years past reports have
sporadically emanated from various parts of the state alleging that beneficial wild life of various kinds was
being destroyed in a wholesale manner through the efforts of officers in
the employ of the State Game Commission, to destroy vermin with poi-
son as a protection to game and wild
birds. While officers of the Game Commission have at no time been permitted to carelessly use strychnine, (the only poison ever used by the Department) and have at all times been instructed to refrain from
using such method unless absolutely
necessary, and then only in places
well back from habitation and in such
a manner that no harm would come
to beneficial wild life or domestic animals in their proper place, still to be
positive these instructions were being closely adhered to and that the
reports made were in error, each report has been carefully investigated
to a conclusion. It is gratifying to state that the outstanding feature of
all these investigations in that the
reports without exception could not
be verified by those making same, and
we have never found a single wild
turkey, or ruffed grouse, or ring-neck
pheasant, or quail, or deer, or bear,
or rabbit, or squirrel, or song or in-
sectivorous birds in any number that
had been killed through the work of
our officers, or even though poison
that had been placed presumably by
bounty seekers, although numbers of
persons claim to have found the bodies of such creatures, which, as above

Killing of Crows.

In the killing of crows when mas-
saged in large numbers during the win-
tertime, after the close of the hunting season, the officers and duly appointed agents of the Game Commission, have had excellent results with-
out any harm to either game or beneficial wild birds. The only vehicle
used for this work is screened whole
corn prepared according to the formula directed by the Game Commission
and before placing the corn poisoned
with strychnine, the crows are regularly fed at a given point for a number of days. When thoroughly accustomed to such feeding place a sufficient amount of the treated corn is
placed in such a manner that any un-
consumed balance may be easily removed. By following this procedure
beneficial results will be obtained
without injury to game or beneficial
wild birds.

Poison.

Recently there has been considerable agitation in the public press of
the state against the improper use of
poison charged to officers of the Game Commission as well as trappers. Investigations made during the past
month by the Department, fail to
disclose conditions such as reported
and no actual evidence could be obtained indicating that beneficial wild
birds or game of any kind had fallen
prey to such methods. Several persons who claimed to have had domestic poultry and other livestock destroyed through poison supposed to
have been placed by representatives
of the Department and trappers
frankly admitted to the officers investigating same that they had not
lost any livestock as reported, one
man saying he simply wanted to
frighten people whom he suspected of
using poison to destroy vermin lest
they do harm and probably kill his
dogs which were running at large
throughout the surrounding territory.

Investigations made by the Game
Commission from time to time have
confirmed reports that in certain sec-

To the Editor—
Today, Washington's birthday, or
the day that is being celebrated as Washington's birthday, I had a day
off from work, so I decided to use a part of this time in getting a long-
deferred haircut.

I walked into a barber shop on Sixty-first street, a shop that had
the appearance of having needed a
general cleaning for possibly a longer time than I had been needing a haircut.

The barber had about one week's
growth of beard on his dirty face
and he was murdering the English
language, making no excuses for having no fire or hot water, but while
he knew very few words of English and could scarcely pronounce
those in a way that could be understood, it did not take him long to
make me understand that he was a
"revolutionist."

SHANTUNG RESERVATION BEFORE SENATE TODAY

17 DEMOCRATS SUPPORTED LODGE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Senate leaders hoped to make progress on the Lodge reservations to the peace treaty today.
The Shantung reservation is now before the Senate which has
adopted the Monroe Doctrine and the domestic questions.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The Senate today adopted two
of the Lodge reservations to the peace treaty with Germany in their original form. One of them was the Monroe doctrine reservation and the vote on it demonstrated, in the opinion of many senators, the hopelessness of ratification efforts, and certainty of the treaty going into the presidential campaign. The other reservation adopted was that concerning domestic questions.

Seventeen Democrats voted with the Republicans to bring
about adoption of the Lodge reservation on the Monroe doctrine.
The reservation adopted today is wholly obnoxious to President Wilson, as he has stated. Before agreeing to it the Senate rejected a reservation which the President told Senator Ellsworth
he would accept.

The vote was 58 to 22. Of the 58, 17 were Democrats and 41 Republicans. The 22 who opposed the reservation were all Democrats.

PRESIDENT TAKES MOTOR CAR RIDE THROUGH STREETS OF WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, March 3.—For the first time since early last October President Wilson took a motor trip through the streets
of Washington riding in a closed car and accompanied by Mrs.
Wilson and Dr. Cary T. Grayson. They motored along the Potomac up Pennsylvania avenue and circled the capital building. Only a few persons saw him. Those who did doffed their hats and there were two or three outbursts of cheering at the

CONTEMPLATED INCREASE IN PRICE OF SHOES SUBJECT TO HOUSE PROBE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—A 25 per cent increase in the
prices of shoes is being contemplated according to information received by Senator McNary, of Oregon, he said today. He has introduced a resolution for a drastic investigation of the shoe
industry. "There does not seem to be any need for an in-crease
in view of the decline in leather prices and the cutting off the
leather exporting," he said.

PALMER'S METHOD OF HANDLING SUGAR PRICES PUT UNDER FIRE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—An investigation of Attorney
General Palmer's handling of the Louisiana sugar situation which
is alleged to have resulted in an increase in price from 11c to 17c
was authorized today by the House Rules Committee. It will be investigated by the House Judiciary committee. In asking
for the investigation Representative Pinkham of Massachusetts
charged that Palmer's action in regard to the Louisiana crop
has increased the price of sugar all over the country.

SERIOUS CROSSING ACCIDENT

PITTSBURGH, March 3.—When the automobile in which
they were riding was struck at the Whitmer crossing by a B. &
O. train Mrs. E. Carter, aged 50, was instantly killed and her husband, the head of the Carter Electric Company, lost both legs.

The MAN NOBODY KNEW at HOLWORTHY HALL.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—In a base hospital at Neuilly, France, his face disfigured beyond recognition, an American soldier serving in the French army attracts attention by his deep despondency. Assisted by the surgeons for a photograph to guide them in making over his face, he offers in derision a picture of the Savior, bidding them take that as a model. They do so, making a remarkable likeness.

CHAPTER II.—Invalided home, on the boat he meets Martin Harmon, New York broker, who is attracted by his remarkable features. The ex-soldier gives his name as "Henry Hilliard," and his home as Syracuse, New York. He left there under a cloud, and is embittered against his former fellow townsmen. Harmon makes him a proposition to sell mining stocks in Syracuse, concealing his identity. He accepts it, seeing in it a chance to make good and prove he has been underestimated.

CHAPTER III.—In Syracuse "Hilliard" (in reality Richard Morgan) is accepted as a stranger. He visits James Cullen, a former employer, relating a story of the death of Richard Morgan, and is surprised to learn that Cullen and his youthful daughter Angela, while at the Cullen home Carol Durant, Morgan's former fiancée, makes a call.

CHAPTER IV.—Hilliard repeats to Carol his story of Morgan's death and is deeply moved by the evidence of her deep love for the supposed dead man. He resolves, however, to continue the deception.

CHAPTER V.—Next day Hilliard gathers from Angela that Carol had always loved Dick Morgan, and while delivering to her a letter supposedly from her father, she realizes that his affection is unchanged. His words by Doctor Durant, Carol's father, also shakes his resolution to continue the deception, but he conquers it.

CHAPTER VI.—In Syracuse Hilliard is looked upon as a capitalist and mining expert, and in that capacity, in pursuance of his object, interested in the possibilities of wealth in mining properties. The Cullens and Hilliard go to the Durant home for dinner.

CHAPTER VII.—Observations at the Durants convince Hilliard that the doctor and his daughter had always been his true friends, and his love for Carol becomes stronger. He realizes he has a dangerous rival in Jack Armstrong, also very much in love with Carol, and the two men tacitly agree to fight it out fairly.

CHAPTER VIII.—Despite his success in interesting capitalists of Syracuse in his mining ventures (which he believes to be a sound proposition) Hilliard secretly has placed himself in such a false position, and in justice to Harmon feels he must go on. He makes confession to Carol of his love for her, and she admits the possibility of his affection being returned in time.

At first, Hilliard was untouched by the shock; the force of it seemed to pass over him entirely; then all at once, as he was caught by the drift of it, his hands began to tremble violently; and his pulses were clanging with sweat. His stomach seemed to drop out of him, and he was nauseated by the tremendous purport of his employer's enunciation.

The New Yorker looked at him in genuine surprise.

"What's the matter, Hilliard? You look sick! Or—do—n it, man. If that's another one of your bluffs, you're wasting your time. You haven't worked up such a holy disposition you believe in this mine, have you?" He moved uneasily. "I wish you'd wipe that pious expression off your face—or is it glued on?"

Hilliard's voice shook uncontrollably.

"This . . . this mine?" he stammered. "You told me—"

"I'll stand by everything I've ever told you, Hilliard. I'll prove it. It's an area of mineralized schist with disseminated copper values. And we've got over a hundred acres of it. And part of the shaft, too!" He laughed noisily. "Of course, altogether there's about five hundred square miles of that same sort of land in the same state, but what's the odds as long's you're happy? Tell me you aren't wise? Rot! Why, you know all about it when we were on the boat!"

Hilliard's muscles were working in hysterical jumps, and his face was distorted.

"Shut up!" The big man was domineering, ugly. "Understand me? You keep your mouth shut if you know what's good for you! Didn't you come up here to get square with your 'friends'? Your friends? His accent was superlatively contemptuous. "You knew it wasn't a producing mine, didn't you?"

"You told me it was a wonderful prospect! I knew it was a long shot, but I thought there was some value there . . . a lot of it . . . and you said the shaft . . . you always said the shaft was—"

Harmon reached for another cigarette; there was undisguised perplexity on his face.

"Son, if you aren't a mighty good actor, you're . . . are you going to claim you didn't know what this mine is? After all that whining and squealing of yours about your getting even? Then what in thunder did you want to come back here for?"

Harmon lighted his cigarette, none too complacently.

"The funny part about it," he said slowly, "is that I don't honestly believe you're bluffing. . . . But you knew it was only a prospect."

"But I thought it was a good prospect! Never mind—" He made as though to rise. "You've said enough. I'm through with you!"

The big man's jaw thrust out beligerently, and he caught Hilliard by the arm.

"Now, stop right there! Sit down! Sit down! Maybe you thought it was a good prospect and maybe you didn't, but you're not through with me yet—not until I say so. Don't you make any mistakes like that, my boy. Don't you go off half-shot—not yet! Remember our contract? Ever heard of promoter's liability? I'd certainly hate to see you get into trouble, but if you've made any wild statements about material facts—"

Hilliard was straining half across the table.

"You told me the ore was there! And I thought the worst that could happen would be to tie up this money for a few years—that's why a prospect's so hard to sell! I knew damned well it wasn't any whirlwind right now, but I did think they'd . . . they'd at least make something good out of it . . . eventually . . . even if it . . ."

"Ah!" said Harmon, sneering, "but you had every opportunity to learn the facts—every opportunity. It's not my fault if you went off half-cocked. I don't know what you've represented to your gang up here. I'm not responsible. All I know is that you've collected sixty-two thousand dollars, and I've turned it over to me, and I'm to give you stock for it and pay you a commission in cash. Maybe you call it a commission . . . it's a rebate! Read the contract. Read it carefully, while you're about it. Take it to a lawyer; I don't care. Any lawyer you like. If you've gone beyond the facts I'm mighty sorry for you, but I don't see how it affects me any. Do you?"

Hilliard had slumped wretchedly into his chair; his thoughts were running aimlessly about the grim axis of his chicanery.

"And . . . and after all I've done!" he said thickly. "After all I've said! Oh, my God!" His chin sank low, and his grip on the table relaxed. Harmon was less at ease than he pretended. "Well, if you aren't bluffing," he said presently, "you sure are the biggest baby for a man's-sized man I ever saw. Brace up, there! You—"

final effort, and his fist gestured his accusation.

"You know what I'm going to do about it, don't you?"

"Yes," Harmon nodded, as he drew the smoke deep into his lungs.

"I'm going straight back to those four men, and—"

"No," Harmon wagged his head. "No, you can't very well do that, either—even if you're as shocked as you look. Look at it just a minute . . . look at our contract. There's some loopholes for me you could drive a motortruck through; but you haven't got one as big as a knitting needle. No, son, the best thing for you to do is to take a leave, and go get another sixty thousand while the getting is good."

"Not necessarily!" Hilliard's high-pitched laugh was bitter.

Harmon allowed the smoke to eddy gently from his nostrils. "Yes—"

McADOO TO URGE WILSON TO ACCEPT RESERVATIONS ON PEACE TREATY

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 2.—The Providence Journal, in a dispatch from its Washington correspondent, will say tomorrow:

In the interest of Democratic party harmony William G. McAdoo has seen or is about to see President Wilson to urge him to consent to ratification of the peace treaty on the basis of the best modifications that can be obtained to the Lodge reservation.

McAdoo has consulted with his close friend and adviser, Bernard M. Baruch, about this, and has told Mr. Baruch that he will speak to the President about it.

Mr. Baruch has told friends that the President appears to him to be following a course with the peace treaty that will force him to seek absolute domination of the convention at San Francisco and either the candidacy for a third term himself or to dictate the candidate and pledge him up to the hilt to his policies, including unreserved ratification of the peace treaty.

Mr. Baruch thinks such a course absolutely impossible, both because of the President's state of health and because of the break in the Democratic ranks it would force.

EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT TO BE THE FOOTBALL OF THE 1920 CAMPAIGN

By L. C. MARTIN

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Efforts of the "wets" to inject prohibition into the national campaign are crystallizing in such definite form that politicians here today said that they believed that the liquor fight will be carried to the polls in November. It will be a fight on the issue of beer and light wines—principally beer—as against complete "dryness." It will not be an effort to restore the saloons. It will be an effort to have beer and wine under certain restrictions as to sale, etc.

When the first "wet" voices proposed prohibition both parties scoffed at the idea of prohibition becoming an issue. They said ratification of the 18th amendment killed liquor for a long time to come but they have begun to change their minds because of recent events.

A summary of the "wet" activities shows strength and vigor. These include:

First pouring of petitions by hundreds on members of both houses for modification of the dry laws.

Second, the activities of Governor Edwards of New Jersey including the announcement that he is going to the Democratic convention to fight for the wet platform.

Third, formation in Chicago of an organization to spread propaganda in favor of members of Congress on the beer and light wine platform.

Fourth, intimation that Wm. G. McAdoo will seek the Democratic nomination for President as the "four per cent candidate" and the Federal Internal Revenue Commissioner Roper will manage his campaign.

MEN TURNING TO BOLSHEVISM

Article XII

By FRANK COMERFORD.

I met a young American major just back from the French front. I had known him for many years. Before the United States entered the war he was one of the many impatient at our delay. He believed that it was our duty to join the fight when the ruthless submarine campaign torpedoed the Lusitania, sending to cold, wet graves American women and children. I distinctly remember his face as he read the headlines in the papers telling of the murderous slaughter of Americans on the high seas. Now when he greeted me he startled me with his first words, "The war is over. I'm a bolshevik." I did not know what the word meant, yet it carried to my mind an impression, and while the impression was hazy, it was clear at least in one particular. It sounded like the confession of a crime.

He had always been of a quiet, conservative type. Before the war one would have judged him to be a pacifist; he was even-tempered, mild of manner, and I still think that before August, 1914, he was a pacifist in head and heart. It was only the call of a just cause, the fight for an ideal in which he believed, that had made him a soldier. In this respect he was typical of 90 per cent of his countrymen.

I had spoken to him the day he enlisted, for he was one of those who volunteered, who might have waited for conscription and claimed a just exemption. He was in the beginning of his married life, with two very young children. By profession he was an engineer. Going to war meant leaving a wife and two babies, leaving a job that promised advancement. I recall his enthusiasm, the intensity of his patriotism, his quiet disregard of the danger to himself. I am sure that there was little hate in his morale. He saw a danger to the world. The honor of his country had been offended against. He was an American, one of those upon whom the duty fell, so he went.

He a bolshevik! Why? I was confounded, confused. The only meaning I gave to his remark was that he was an anarchist. The word "bolshevik" sounded red to me. It fared of the torch, photographed disorder, lawlessness—registered blood, violence, assassination, force, hate, insanity. I wondered how this nine-lettered word had become the vehicle for so many sensations that disturbed peace of mind and sounded alarm.

Where had the word come from and what company had it kept that so fouled its soul? What did it really mean—had it a definite meaning? Was it a bug like the "flu" germ? Had it come among nations to destroy them and to the hearts of men to silence the heavenly message, "Peace on earth, good will to men"? Would it come around the world as a scourge? Was it a postscript to the bloody war lesson, prophesying more anguish and tears than four years' fighting had brought? Would the world, coming out of the war bent, now be broken?

Seeking Word's Real Meaning. Or was the meaning that men had read into the word a lie? Was bolshevism the message of a new Messiah being cried down by the money-changers of our time in the same way their ancestors had silenced the word from the Mount and destroyed the Message Bearer with the lash and the cross?

In every mind was the thought and from every tongue fell the word. Russia had given the world a word. It had encircled the globe. Everywhere people were speaking the word—it found lodgment in every brain, a living place in every language. Its use had become universal. The old, the young, rich and poor, the learned, the unlearned, the serious, the simple, the poet, the artist, the poet, and the peddler, the thinker and the thinker, the thought and spoke the word. Men, women and children spoke the word, read the word, and felt the thought it carried.

To the one hundred and ninety-nine it was a word of freedom, a word of terror and fear. To the one in a thousand it was a word of hope, a light for the feet of a stumbling world, and to the one hundred and ninety-nine said shovels were dreamers of a strange dream, that twisted idealism had made them mad, that the majority of those who profess faith in bolshevism were sick with a strange, social fever, that they were mischief-makers, never-do-wells, criminals, that they sought to harm the world.

I made up my mind that I would learn the real meaning of the word. The dictionary definition threw no light on its meaning. I came to the conclusion that to learn what bolshevism is I might with wisdom adopt the scientific method used by the doctor of medicine in arriving at a diagnosis. The doctor examines and gathers the symptoms, the meaning of the disease. He then determines what diseases might produce these symptoms. By a process of elimination he discards one possibility after another until at last there is but one disease left, one thing that the symptoms can mean.

I discovered at the outset that most of us have the habit of using terms loosely. Seldom do we give time or thought to the exact, real meaning of things. The meaning of bolshevism is too important to the world not to try to understand it. There is a difference between having the acquaintance of a word and knowing; the former is a mere introduction, the latter an intimacy.

Since the war, when the fastidious diner wearily orders his consommé and the waiter brings it a bit tardily or cold, he thinks to himself, or if courageous enough to speak his mind, he calls the cook a bolshevik. He has found a word to express his irritation. It serves his purpose and at the same time saves his suzer respectability.

See Bolshevism Everywhere.

Once the mind asking for an afternoon off provoked a knowing smile. Her mistress granted the request, charged it up to a possible romance and generally suspected the policeman on the beat. Since the war it is different. The maid is looked upon with suspicion. Her motives are questioned. The request is considered a symptom of the new terrible disease, bolshevism. The mistress thinks to herself: The maid doesn't want to work any more; she is down with the epidemic.

The office boy, working the reliable excuse that his grandmother has died again, to get an afternoon off to go to the ball game, is trying to shirk work, in the opinion of his employer, who formerly, when such an application was made from the same source, chuckled as he granted it, while his memory took him back to his own boyhood days when he used the grandmother yarn to answer the call of the ball field.

Many captains of industry see the symptoms of the new dread in every movement and thought of the workers. The demand for living conditions and decent wages are gradually resolved by minds seared with the thought that it is bolshevism.

The hovers of child labor, looking hatefully at legislation designed to end child slavery, call the leaders of child life conservation bolsheviks. When doctors and public-spirited men and women insist that an irreparable injury is being done the nation in allowing women to work for a period in excess of the hours they are able to work without maiming their motherhood, the professors from woman labor cry out: "You are invading the right of private contract; your are mad with bolshevism."

Every Sort of Definition.

The wag with the wit of a barber defined bolshevism as a wild idea surrounded by whiskers. The saloon-keeper, hounded over by prohibition, screams "bolshevism." The anti-saloon leaders come back with the answer, "Your 'personal liberty' cry is only a camouflage for bolshevism."

If anyone disagrees with you, don't grant him the right to an opinion, don't reason with him—just call him a bolshevik. The word has become an epithet, a popular invective, a slur, an insult, an outlet for contempt, contumely and hate. Its pernicious influence our definition of it. Most of us see the Russians with the eyes of the caricaturists, who for so many years have portrayed the Russian as the moujik with high boots, disheveled hair, wild whiskers, the face of an assassin, the body of a terrorist in action, the suggestion of a long dagger smeared with hot blood, under his greatcoat.

If a doctor, making an examination of all of the patients in a hospital, discovered they all had certain symptoms in common, such as temperature, weakness and pain, and because of these findings should diagnose the sickness of all of the patients as pneumonia, the doctor would be regarded a lunatic. Yet there are men in the world today who are as foolish as such a doctor should be. They read every symptom of unrest, without regard to its history, bolshevism.

Good Weather.

Sunshine is delicious, rain is refreshing, wind braces up, snow is exhilarating; there is really no such thing as bad weather—only different kinds of good weather.—John Ruskin

Why More Than a Million Housewives Wash Our Way

When more than a million women abandon old methods for new, there must be some truly substantial reason for the change.

More than a million housewives in the United States—and the figures are authoritative—have adopted the laundry way of doing their family washing; have adopted our way.

They have found these to be its advantages: It takes the upsetting work of wash-day out of the home. It conserves the health and energy of women. It insures purity for clothes. It gives women time for more congenial and womanly activities. It costs no more than the laundress. It guarantees punctual collection and delivery. It makes homes happier.

These are but a few of the advantages enjoyed by the million housewives who have adopted our washday way. Make it yours. Telephone us and our driver will call for your family bundle.

Not Grandma Used Sage Tea To Darken Her Hair.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

IF BACKACHE OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take a glass of Salts to flush out kidneys—Drink plenty water.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urino-waste or you'll be a real sick person, shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomachache gets sour tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

French Dueling Is Dead; HCL And War Killed It

By HENRY WOOD

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Feb. 15.—(By Mail).—Paris dueling is definitely dead.

This is the consensus of both the French press and the French public following the few sporadic attempts that have taken place since the armistices to revive what was formerly the most picturesque and the most harmless of Parisian sports.

Two causes are conceded to belatedly responsible for the untimely demise of these "affairs of honor," namely the war and the high cost of living.

During the five years of the war the French public became too accustomed to seeing hundreds and thousands of men killed and mutilated to be able to stir up any enthusiasm or interest in a mere skin scratch sustained in a duel.

Secondly, the high cost of living and the depreciated value of currency and fixed fortunes generally has rendered it entirely too expensive an affair to stage a Parisian duel. Without the duel being staged so that the two combatants might get the greatest amount of publicity and social gossip out of it, there is very little object in risking having one's skin scratched and possibly getting infected with sleeping sickness microbes.

According to La Liberté, which recently published an obituary notice of the "duel" affairs of honor at Paris are now being settled in the following manner:

When two "messieurs" get involved in an argument in which the honor of one or the other of them becomes joined, the latter says to the former: "You're a bloody, bow-legged, knocked-kneed, spindle-shank d war-prostitute," or words to that effect.

"You're a vulgar nouveau riche," replies the aggressor.

"Consider yourself slapped in the face," replies the aggressed.

"Consider your own face equally slapped" retorts the aggressor.

Thereupon, there being absolutely no deeper limit of either insult or injury to which the two can sing, they either turn their backs on each other and walk away, or else shake hands and are reconciled on the spot.

Before the war, of course, the two having got to the point where they had constructively slapped each other's face, seconds were called in, efforts made at reconciliation which always failed, and then with great form and pomp, everyone clad in high silk hats, Prince Albert coats and chrysanthemums in the buttonhole, the whole lot repaired to the fairs wheel on the Champ de Mars and proceeded to have each other's gore.

Before the gore stage was reached however, press photographers took photographs of the two would-be slayers with arms in their hands, the society reporters took down the names of the brilliant gathering of aristocracy and nobility gathered in the offing, and then the two fighters went for each other until one or the other got accidentally, intentionally or purposely scratched.

Thereupon, physicians who had been held in the leash were turned loose. They dashed madly up, ascertained that blood was actually showing through the skin and then in order to prevent any further useless shedding of "useless blood"—according to the point of view, the whole affair was reluctantly terminated.

"The Private Secretary"

The first of the series of school plays to be given by the classes of High school will be presented by the Sophomore class Friday evening. The boys and girls who comprise the cast of characters have been working diligently so that they might acquire themselves like real actors when the test of their ability comes Friday evening.

"The Private Secretary" is a play that has been given with great success by various professional and amateur companies. In the plot Douglas Catermole, nephew of a wealthy gentleman from India, is urged by his uncle to sow his wild oats. This he readily consents to do, but by masquerading as the Rev. Robert Spalding who is the "Private Secretary" to Mr. Marseland, master of a large country estate. In the role of the Reverend Spalding is helped by his young friend Harry Marseland.

In the course of unraveling the character tangle, many complications arise which present most ridiculous situations.

The Sophomores who have charge of the sale of tickets report that there is great demand for seats. This is not more than is to be expected for it is traditional with Clearfield that its people enjoy home talent plays—and especially so when the talent is composed of the boys and girls of school.

Reservations for seats may be made Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at three forty-five in the High School building. There is no charge for reserved seats.

Cardinal Manning.

The middle of the nineteenth century saw a great movement in England toward the Church of Rome. Among the many well-known converts was Henry E. Manning, who had been a clergyman in the Church of England for over fifteen years. He entered the Roman priesthood and was ultimately made cardinal archbishop of Westminster. He died January 14, 1902.

Strange Animals.

Those quaint box hedges, which one sometimes sees nowadays in the British Isles, cut out on the top into curious little shapes of birds and animals, are of exceedingly ancient lineage. Pliny the Younger in describing the garden of one of his villas mentions "animals in box, facing each other," and this was perhaps in about the year 100 A. D.

Many Still Read Dickens.

Charles Dickens has been rated by a class of the younger literary critics as a decided back number, but the statement by his British publishers that during the past three years the sale of his books has been almost doubled seems to refute that idea. Some of Dickens' novels sell more than 50,000 every year, and he has been dead forty-eight years. His sales during the last ten years have been larger. It is asserted, than those of any three novelists put together.

Pick a Do Family Wash.

Among the most curious methods of seed distribution are those seeds which are carried through the air on wings, such as the maple, which has two wings, and the catkins, the elm, the ash and the pine. These seeds do not flap their wings like birds, but depend altogether upon the force of the wind to carry them along. Other floating seeds are the milkweed, the dandelion and the dandelion.

You can save time and steps if you have an Evryday Beechwood combination coal and gas range in your kitchen.

There are two complete ovens—one coal and one gas—a gas broiling oven and eight holes in the top. More cooking room, yet the Evryday Beechwood occupies no more space than a plain range.

The combination range comes in plain and enameled models. Three colors of enamel—blue, black, and brown. The polished tops can be cleaned with an oiled cloth; the enamel with a damp one—no blacking necessary. An enameled range is a work saver. Come in and see them.

Oh! That Back of Mine!

It is many a woman's complaint for it seems as though it would break—feet swell too sometimes and head buzzes. This is often due to the uric acid which accumulates in the system.

Naturally when the kidneys are deranged the blood is filled with poisonous waste matter, which settles in the feet, ankles and wrists; or under the eyes in bag-like formations.

Often there is pain in back or limbs.

As a remedy for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation caused by uric acid—as scalding urine, backache and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gout, it is simply wonderful how quickly Dr. Pierce's Anurie acts, when you take this new kidney remedy of Dr. Pierce's the pains and stiffness rapidly disappear, for "Anurie" (anti-uric-acid) is many times more potent than lithia and often eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar, thus removing rheumatism and lumbago.

Montrose, Pa.—"When I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Anurie I could hardly go up and down stairs. I had to put one foot up and then drag the other up, I had such a lame hip, but now I can run up and down as well as I ever did in my life. Had suffered with indigestion 25 or 30 years—was almost afraid to eat, but now I can eat almost anything and have gained seven pounds. I took the 'Medical Discovery,' 'Anurie Tablets,' and one vial of 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

SPRING FLUFFS AND FRILLS

(Written for The United Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Such fluffs and feathers, fluffs and frills will deck our gals this Spring in time—mums truly feminine we'll not overlook a thing. The tiny ribbon ruching and the fluting soft of silk, the puffings and the scolloppings and bandings of that silk will edge the many flounces and the panner and puff that set about the hip line till its quite bouffant enough.

A most attractive model, a baby blue in tinge, is trimmed in rows and rows and rows of narrow, silken fringe. The fringe, uncut, has silken loops and its cerulean, too, but once within its dainty folds, no maiden could be blue. Of tulle this frock is built, fringed panners at each side, a fitted bodice, elbow sleeves, and neck low, square and wide.

The fitted bodice is the thing. It's really come to stay whether it's with or without the stay it's welcomed either way. Some high necked are some cut so low that they are all cut up. The high ones snugly fit the throat then flare your chins to cup. The low cut ones affect the square of the face, the oval line and wear a bit of hand made lace of texture super fine.

The slip on blouse is also good in any stuff at all that has an Oriental touch, a bit of Chinese shawl or gold and silver tulle or Batiks, beauteous. These blouses reach just to the hips in manner rather stunted. The

THE SUNDERED TIE

By ALLEN CHAPMAN

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

Once a year, in the latter part of June, Mabel Trescott spent two weeks with her mother. Once a year—it was at the holiday season—her father came to Euston, put up at the local hotel for half a week and saw a good deal of his daughter during that time. For eight years Mabel had practically lived at the Euston seminary except for these breaks. It was just after her sixteenth birthday that she solved for the first time in her life the mystery of the strange separation of husband and wife since she was a little baby. Her mother had never told her. A stern, joyless woman, when the subject was broached she said, austere: "We could not agree and it was for the best."

Later a schoolmate, who had learned the real story from her mother, related it to Mabel. "Your mother had been brought up in a quiet, congenial family," she said. "For a year she and your father seemed contented and happy. Then you were born and your mother grew homesick for the old folks and the old life. She hated the city. She insisted that your father return with her to the old farm. In vain he pleaded that it would be at the sacrifice of a promising business career. Your mother made a home visit and—never returned."

Mabel was seventeen years old when an annual visit of her father came around. She was restless and excited on this occasion, and he noticed it. She had introduced to him a favorite school friend, Nellie Roberts, and then her brother, Harold. Both attracted the liking of Mr. Trescott.

"Oh! I am so glad you think so," cried Mabel, ecstatic over the trap she had led him into. "Dear papa, mamma likes him, too, and after our graduation next June, please may I marry him?"

There was no resisting that loving heart, but when the wedding had come and gone and the happy pair settled down in a town near the farm where the mother lived, Mr. Trescott felt lonely and dissatisfied. So long had he been parted from his wife that he feared she might resent a visit on his part to his daughter's home, and he never went there, despite constant invitations. At the end of two years, however, there came an urgent letter from Mabel.

"I want to see you, papa," she wrote, "and so does Harold, and so does the dearest little baby grandchild in the world. We have named her Sarah, after mamma, and she looks like you. It is all arranged that you are to come to us next Wednesday and stay over the week-end, and oh, we will all be so happy!"

Not a word was said of Mrs. Trescott, and her husband judged that Mabel too fully understood the situation to embarrass them by having them under the same roof at the same time. More than that, he did not believe that his wife would consent to break in upon the strange silence that he had so patiently borne. In all charity he had accepted the general decision that she was a notional, peculiar woman.

He was enchanted by his welcome at the Roberts home. He had said that Harold was "a fine young man," and he indeed presented the semblance of a model son-in-law. Their little home was a paradise, the baby the most wonderful creature the world had ever loved. Comfort, serenity, perfect love filled the little cottage, and as he was shown to his room Mr. Trescott experienced memories that particularly sweetened the occasion.

Strongly was he reminded of the blissful year when his wife had revealed herself as the typically perfect housekeeper. A bureau drawer gave out an odor of sweet lavender that reminded him of Sarah, the smell of apples in another wafted a like memory of those lost days, and the aroma of newly baked bread wrapped in a towel caused him a longing, cherished sensation that fairly suggested the home he had not known for years, but here was its glowing counterpart.

And then the meal! Had Mabel duplicated those old-time dinners when he and Sarah had been so happy? He expressed himself with a choking sensation, his emotion over coming him as after the meal he whispered to his daughter:

"Father, it will be that, indeed, if you will have it so. Somebody is waiting for you after all the years—oh! forgive me and love!"

She had gently pushed open a door and the mystery of those old reminders was explained. There, near the kitchen table, sat Sarah Trescott, looking to the little babe in her arms. Her eyes met those of her husband in one soft, longing, half-frenzied glance. Then they dropped, and the tears came. She was the suppliant but he would not have it so. He knelt beside her and drew her head to his shoulder where it belonged.

essarily." "You think I'll raise my finger after this, except to . . . what do you take me for?"

"I take you," said Harmon deliberately, "for a short-sighted young man in a mighty bad spot. You don't want these folks up here to know the whole truth, do you? It wouldn't hurt me any—but after the record you made here before you got yourself kicked out two years ago. . . . Oh! don't jump! You don't think I've been asleep, do you? . . . I don't believe you'd get much sympathy. Not much! And I've invested a lot of money in you. . . . I want some big returns. Look me in the eye, son. I want you to calm down. Now, there's only three parties to this deal—you and me and the world. You and me—and the world. Get that? And you and I have got to play straight with each other. You help me get the money, and I'll help you get whatever you want. But when you throw me down, I throw you down, and we'll see who comes out ahead. I'll bet I do. What do you bet?"

Hilliard shook his head helplessly. "You've got to remember," said Harmon in sardonic consolation, "that you're an awful easy man to describe. You can slip out of Syracuse just as easy as you please, and try your darnedest to make a getaway, and you'd have pretty hard work to keep away from the Pinkertons for twenty-four hours. And I've got the evidence that would put 'em after you. So don't you plan to run away, son—don't do it."

"Well?" Harmon snatched at the sign of weakness, and was instantly persuasive.

"Stay on another six weeks; make the rest of your killing. After this is over, do what you please. You'll have money enough to suit yourself. I'm playing straight with you . . . and I not?"

Harmon glowered at him. "Don't you accuse me of double-crossing you, son! It's the other way round."

"You aren't fool enough to expect me," said Hilliard shakily, "to keep on trying to sell more of this rotten stuff! You aren't enough of a fool for that!"

"I can, and I do. You're in for it now, Hilliard, and you can't very well go back. You've collected money; you can't get your hands on it again; you can't make any restitution. You've lied your head off already; you can't do any better now than to stick to your first story, because the truth's a good deal worse. You'd better make your killing and make it quick. And if you open your head for just one little peep . . . floozy, floozy, and the fat's in the fire. Well . . ."

Hilliard's head was splitting with the horror of it. He saw, in a whirling vision of dread, the people of the city rising to denounce him; not merely for his inexcusable masquerade, so grotesquely built upon the dream of regeneration, not only for his vast abuse of personal confidence, but only for the base hypocrisy he had practiced upon his quondam sweetheart, but also for this grossly profitable fraud. Dimly, he argued just as Harmon claimed, he couldn't be in harder straits. A spasm of reckless fatalism shook him.

Harmon, who had been inspecting him critically, took out his fountain pen.

"I'll write you your check for commissions—shall I?" He held the pen poised menacingly. "And then we'll

For the Stork Airplane Passenger

When the single passenger of that oldest airplane—the stork—glides to earth, he expects to find everything in readiness for his comfort at least. But often he finds waiting all sorts of splendid affairs in the way of carriages, cradles or bassinets, of the degree of daintiness and luxury revealed in the picture above, in which muslins, ribbons and frills make a resting place quite fit for an angel. This bassinet is of wicker enameled in white and has a hood of white dotted swiss finished with frills edged with lace. It is mounted on a wooden carriage, also white enameled, and having narrow rubber tires, so that it is easy to move his babyship about the room or sleeping porch or wherever he takes his protracted naps. Very wide and soft satin ribbon in pink or blue is used for making the several full bows which serve as flags of welcome and signs of honor for the new arrival.

A bassinet of this kind is more convenient than a cradle, but not a downright necessity like the layette. This latter has been arranged by outfitters of infants to include all the baby can possibly need, but they state the list following to be the "irreducible minimum." Three bands, three skirts, four pinning blankets, four flannel skirts, six lawn skirts, six slips, three dozen diapers, four pairs silk and wool stockings, one baby blanket. For the winter baby, knit or eiderdown jackets are added to these articles.

Extra dresses, bonnets, cloaks and booties are added to the layette when the baby is old enough to get out of doors, a time that arrives early in his career. Baby clothes are simply made; fine lawn and batiste the favorite cotton materials, and the trimming of the narrowest and daintiest laces, needlework and dainty embroidery, all sparingly used. Handwork is the hallmark of excellence in the layette. As for the baby's health, his Uncle Sam has provided pamphlets on all sorts of subjects that the inexperienced mother may use as a guide.

Julius Bottumby

forget this little misunderstanding, and start fresh. Shall I? Let's see," with great attentiveness to the figures. "Your twenty per cent is twelve thousand four hundred, and that, less half expense . . . call 'em five thousand expense . . . that's seventy-four hundred." He tore a sheet from his pocket check book, dried the ink by waving it in the air, and flitted it over to Hilliard. "Put it away and let's have some lunch. If you're afraid to have your friends see me down here, let's have it upstairs. I'm not sensitive, son; it don't pay."

"That's the idea! Now you're talking sense! Come on, son, buck up and let's have some lunch. . . ."

At eight o'clock in the evening, when Rufus Waring knocked at Hilliard's door, it was opened by a man with a face to remember afterward. There were deep-cut lines—almost furrows—by the mouth and eyes; and the eyes themselves were startlingly luminous, and drawn. The man's complexion was chalk-white.

"Why, Mr. Hilliard!" exclaimed Waring. "What on earth's the matter with you?"

Cheap and Pretty Homes.

One of the most interesting exhibits at the British Dairy association show was a four-room cottage, complete, with large entrance hall, carriage pad to the nearest freight station, priced at $875. The house is made of asbestos—a compound of asbestos and cement—and the manufacturers describe it as "weather-proof, ratproof and damp-proof." A charming little week-end cottage of two rooms is offered at $375.

Fatal Timidity.

Every day sends to the grave obscure men who have remained in obscurity only because their timidity, their lack of self-confidence, prevented them from making a first effort. If they could have been induced to begin; if they had trusted in their own powers and dared to forge ahead they could, in all probability, have gone great lengths in careers of usefulness and fame.—Orison Sweet Marden.

Gold Bricks.

A gold brick, of the kind sold by clever swindlers to "easy marks," is a product of highly skilled workmanship. It is made of copper, alloyed with a little zinc, and is painted with red gold to which some mercury has been added. This gives a very smooth and satisfactory effect; and the mercury being evaporated by heat, a final varnish of "gilding wax" lends an attractive luster.

Fish Shoots Its Prey.

A shooting-fish in the East Indies has a hollow cylindrical beak. When it sees a fly on plants that grow in shallow streams it ejects a single drop of water, which knocks the fly into the tide.

How Much You Should Weigh.

A simple way to ascertain one's ideal weight was told recently by Dr. Harvey G. Beck of the University of Maryland, in an address before the Los Angeles County Medical association at Los Angeles, Cal. First, put down 110. Then multiply by 5 1/2 the number of inches by which one's height exceeds five feet. Add the result of the multiplication to the original 110 and the sum is one's "ideal weight."—Popular Science Monthly.

Early Egyptian Ruins.

The kings of the earliest dynasties reared no pyramids. Their tombs were great structures mainly underground, that of Aha (who is possibly Menes, the first king of Egypt), at Nagada measures 175 feet by 85, and contains 21 chambers—built sometimes of brick, with a lining of wood, and sometimes doored with stone, as in the case of the tomb of King Den at Abydos, whose granite floor furnishes the earliest known example of the use of stone in building.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Fitting a Bear With New Teeth. A grizzly bear may wear out his teeth, just the same as a human being. When he needs new ones he gets them, particularly in America. More animal dentistry has been done here than in any other country. Once, when an old pet bear belonging to the owner of a well-known menagerie was fitted with a complete set of false teeth, it was necessary to glue the plates to the bear's mouth to keep them in place.

Primrose Legend.

The primrose is an oracle in love affairs. Let youth or maid pull the flower, and after cutting off the tops of the stems, lay it in a secret place. Let youth dream through the night of his sweetheart. Upon looking at it the next day, if he finds the stems shot out to their former height, success will attend; if not, disappointment.

New Orleans Cemeteries.

The Seven Seas.

Did Kipling consult Hindu mythology when choosing the title for his well-known book, "The Seven Seas"? According to the Puranas, the earth is circular and flat, like the flower of a water lily. Its circumference is 1,000,000,000 miles. In the center is Mount Sumeroo.

The Business Part.

A dog had bitten a child in our neighborhood, and we were discussing the incident. One neighbor informed us that the dog was part poodle and part bull. Frank, who had listened eagerly to the conversation, turned to his mother and asked: "Mother, which part bit him?"—Exchange.

HOT WATER FOR SICK HEADACHES

Tells why everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast.

Headaches are caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head, producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilid, aspirin or the bromides, which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drunk before breakfast will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache, but will cleanse, purify and freshen the alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphate hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Great Little Explainer.

No matter what trouble Tommy gets into, he always manages to offer some sort of excuse, until even his little sister is on to him. The other day he dropped her doll and broke it. Before he had time to open his mouth she exclaimed in an angry voice: "There, now, I saw you did it, so don't try to make an excuse."

Big Consumption of Molasses.

Unauthorized Persons to be Prosecuted.

While the writer is confident the practice of placing poison outside of buildings for various purposes is not general throughout the Commonwealth, in order to break up such practice wherever it may be in vogue it is the purpose of the Game Commission to bring legal action against unauthorized individuals under the Act of May 23rd, 1878, which specifically prohibits individuals from placing poison "anywhere outside of buildings for the purpose of killing any wild bird or animal," if there is evidence indicating that beneficial wild life has been destroyed.

If practices of this sort cannot otherwise be curbed, druggists who carelessly dispense poisons in violation of law will likewise face prosecution.

Federal Investigation.

In response to several petitions from Pennsylvania, alleging the destruction of large numbers of beneficial migratory birds through the use of poison by the Game Commission and individuals in Pennsylvania, a representative of the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., recently made a careful investigation. The report made to the Chief of that Bureau reads in part as follows:

"The present poisoning operations of the State Game Commission are conducted in a careful manner, both against crows and certain mammals. No recent or specific cases of bird destruction were reported or witnessed."

"The secondary poisoning of persons killing gallinaceous game birds after they have fed on poisoned grain placed for vermin from experience is either impossible or very improbable."

This report thus clearly exonerates the Game Commission of Pennsylvania.

There was a peaceful, benevolent smile on the face of John Mayhew as he sat down in the waiting room of a large city depot until his suburban train was ready. The smile was habitual with him, generated by youthful association for years in his business life. Now, he had retired, young as he was, and it was declared that his happy, indulgent spirit was the outcome of conducting an establishment specializing in children's garments.

He had about everything that could conduce to comfort and luxury except a wife. In the race for money he had never had time to choose one. Just now as a young lady of peculiar grace and loveliness regarded him with mute inquiry, his encouraging return glance seemed to inspire her with confidence. "Will you kindly keep an eye on my suitcase for a few moments?" she inquired timidly. "I have an errand to a store across the road."

"I shall be pleased," nodded Mayhew, and as she arose, followed her with his glance, noting that she was rather poorly dressed, but tracing in her bearing the attributes of a cultured lady. In an idle reverie he attempted to construct mentally the life history of the girl and studied the worn suitcase which suggested long use through the past.

Fifteen minutes went by, and Mayhew began to grow uneasy. His train was called, departed. A second one—an hour went by. His dilemma upset him, quite. What could have detained the young lady? Could there be some trick in leaving him to guard her luggage? He gingerly lifted the suitcase. Something jingled inside, suggesting mechanism. A bomb! Mayhew drew back suspiciously. The depot agent approached and spoke to him, first consulting a slip of paper in his hand and scanning Mayhew closely.

"Did a young lady leave some baggage in your charge about an hour ago?" inquired the station man.

"Why, yes," replied Mayhew, relievedly.

You are described in a telephone message received from a hospital. That must be the satchel referred to. It belongs to a Miss Ava Roylston.

She was run down by an automobile just outside. Not seriously hurt, but booked for a few days. She requests that the suitcase be sent to her."

"Run down by an automobile!" repeated Mayhew, quite shocked. "Wishes the suitcase? What hospital is it? I will take it to her at once."

A generous impulse moved him as his memory framed that interesting face and he felt censured at having suspected that he was the victim of a scheme.

Within the hour Mayhew was at the hospital. The physician in charge of Miss Roylston relieved his anxiety with the statement that his patient was only slightly bruised.

"If you are a friend, you had better see her," he suggested. "The young lady is very much perturbed as to how she shall get word to her father without much alarming him."

Ava Roylston reached out an eager hand to clasp that of Mayhew when she realized his thoughtfulness in her behalf. There were tears of gratitude in her lovely eyes.

"To think I left you there in the depot waiting all that time, and missing your train and coming way up here with my suitcase," she began, but Mayhew led the conversation at once to her home and relatives.

"You live at Norton," he said. "That is the next station to mine. Take no care on your mind, Miss Roylston. I will see your father and will come here tomorrow, if I may, to see how you are getting along and to attend to any errands you may have left undone."

John Mayhew went to bed later that night feeling that he had done a good day's work. He had located the poor, humble home of the Roylstons, learning that the father was a struggling inventor, and that they had been living from hand to mouth for years. The old genius was engrossed in perfecting a new order of flying machine. Meantime, to keep the wolf from the door, he told Mayhew, he had devised a toy for children, a ball that would walk in quite a natural way. As he produced these his daughter would dress them and take them to the city to sell to the toy dealers. One of these constituted the contents of the suitcase.

When John Mayhew entered the hospital next morning a pleasant sight greeted him. Miss Roylston was sitting up in a wheel chair at a table near the cots occupied by two little children. She was gratifying them to a degree of delirious joy as she started one of the walking dolls around the table. It was with the eye of a keen business man that Mayhew examined one of the dolls as to mechanism and selling ability.

Life had a new meaning for him the rest of that week. He saw utility, a value in the pretty toy, and amazed Richard Roylston by offering him a goodly sum for control of the patent.

There was no living "hand to mouth" at the Roylston home after that. And one day, after a long conversation with Ava, John Mayhew left her home with a happy heart. He had asked her to become his wife and told her to think over the proposal till the next day. There was no need for it. As he left her home, hand to mouth, the lovely Ava blew him a kiss, and he anticipated her formal reply later.

Mrs. Gainer Bloom is very ill at her home on Fourth street suffering from tonsillitis.

the man who runs the corner grocery.

My education has been neglected, and I know very little of the proper way in which to handle the English or any other language, but I did my best in telling them what I thought of an American who would uphold a foreign leech in his anarchist doctrine; a doctrine that would destroy the very land that gave the same leech his liberty.

Some time ago I heard a man on a Hog Island car say: "I have got drunk, and it is nobody's damn business. I will get drunk again when I feel like it. I am going to drink just as long as I can buy, borrow or steal booze, and I am going to teach my children to drink. And what do you think of that?"

About a month later I happened to be on the same car with this man again, but this time he had another hobby.

He said: "I am an anarchist and don't care who knows it. I am going to wave the red flag. There are ninety-five men in here (by the register) and I will bet that 75 per cent. of them will agree with me."

Just then the conductor rang up the hundredth fare, and he called their attention to the 100 and claimed that seventy-five of them were ready face, these pests and cowards. So to wave the red flag with him. His "call their hand" and watch them scheme was to have all the working men in the United States go on strike for six months, and by that time every capitalist would be dead, property would all belong to the working man, pork chops would be 10 cents per pound, with the prices of other things in proportion.

Just who would be producing the pork chops while the strike was on he failed to say. No doubt, he overlooked that little detail.

I have been hearing this kind of talk for almost two years. I have fought it all I could in a small way but I have yet to hear another man who happened to be with a bunch of these hoodlums raise his voice in defense of his country and government. Do not say that these hoodlums are or a living without work.

There might be a revolution, for there might be "damn fools" enough here to start one, but the "revolvers" will find more good American citizens ready to oppose them than they dreamed were in the U. S. A., and among those citizens will be those who have been successful, thanks to their own ambition and the opportunities of their adopted country. And facing this army, the anarchist's dream of a revolution will be along the shores of much as he ever made in any foreign land; or, what is worse yet, listen to two great oceans; and there will be some American, who has had all the advantages this, the best country in the world affords, advocate a revolution and the abolition of the government that protects them all!

Many of these men do not read, who might have some influence with this class, does not work directly with this class of workers, and as a consequence does not hear the things that the man who works with these anarchists hears.

Yes, I come in contact with many of these men who could never be reached through the newspapers or magazines. These are the men who are ever ready to listen to any propaganda that speaks of profit and plunder.

There might be a revolution, for there might be "damn fools" enough here to start one, but the "revolvers" will find more good American citizens ready to oppose them than they dreamed were in the U.
